

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' PICTURE A MARVEL

Famed Artist Seen at His Best in Expensive and Elaborate Film Production.

It is a long time since a photoplay production has taken hold of Kingston theatre-goers the way that "Don Q., Son of Zorro" has.

Starring Douglas Fairbanks, playing a dual role as Don Caesar de Vega, and as Zorro, his father, the famed screen artist is seen at his best, though throughout the major portion of the story, his role is played in that of Don Caesar de Vega.

Returning to Spain from California to complete his studies, he begins his very active and amazing career in the land of his forefathers at a Students' Club.

Believed That Figure Satisfactory to the Company Will Be Reached.

As a result of a private conference the members of the Public Utilities Commission had on Thursday afternoon it is believed that a satisfactory agreement will be reached for the supply of power for the street railway company.

The conference was attended by Mr. Ross, the well-known expert, and H. C. Nickle, manager of the street railway. The members of the Commission also had before them the report of Prof. Arkley, of Queen's University, who made a report on the cost of power for the street railway, for the commission.
