Careless Shampooing Spoils the Hair

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Do not use prepared shampoos or anything else that contains too much free alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is Mulsified coconut oil shampoo, which is pure and greenish, and is better than anything else you can use.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified is sufficient to cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil.

The hair dries quickly and evenly—and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky; bright, lustrous, fluffy, wavy, and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified coconut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is inexpensive and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified. Beware of imitations. Look for the name Watkins on the package.

Lady Byng Travels 80,000 Miles in Pursuit of Hobby

Lady Byng of Vimy has travelled 80,000 miles by train and boat, exclusive of many miles by motor, during her five years residence in Canada as the wife of Canada's Governor-General, and in all this travelling has constantly pursued a hobby. That hobby is the collection of Canada's wildflowers. Telling the story of what is probably the most remarkable collection of Canadian wildflowers ever gathered in the Dominion, in the May issue of Canadian Homes and Gardens, Lady Byng reveals "The human side" in the life of the King's representative in Canada. She says: "The Governor-General has to tour officially in places as far removed from one another as Prince Edward Island and Vancouver; the Niagara Peninsula and Dawson City; and 'official visits' meaning receptions by mayors and corporations, Lieutenant-Governors, or provincial legislators, do not always square—either in garments or seasons—with a plant hunt!" Still I have been amazingly lucky.

"Canadians, who are the kindest people in the world, and the most hospitable, realizing my craze, have, wherever possible, helped me to attain my dreams of grubbing in the wilds; and the moment the reception ends the kindly and helpful Mr. Allen, manager of the Government-General's train, congenial autocrat of our daily lives upon it, has, if possible, 'parked' our perambulating home in good 'hunting grounds.' Crowded stations left behind, waving Mayors and Mayoresses, school children singing 'O Canada' and the National Anthem being no longer in the offing, I fly into old clothes and by the time we are 'parked' in our siding am ready for the fray. Armed with spades, forks, and other gardening impediments, we go, my secretary, a luckless A.D.C., and I, into the woods or across the sun-scorched prairies, to seek for treasures that will eventually be housed in wooden boxes filled with various kinds of soil that form 'Her Excellency's Garden' in one of the baggage wagons, where they remain, either till they have died down enough to send home, or till we reach Government House, where they are grown on.

"The windows of the observation car also play a useful part, and, to the curiosity of station crowds, are hung with muslin bags of ripening seeds, so that I sometimes wonder if people seeing these bags thing them part of the gubernatorial laundry!" Lady Byng has pursued her hobby in the swamps of the Maritime Provinces, across the wind swept prairies of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, up the foothills of Western Alberta and at many points on the side of the great mountains of the Rocky chain. She has travelled extensively throughout British Columbia in search of the rare flowers of the Pacific Coast province and she has gone up into the sub-Arctic covering the North West territory and the Yukon up to and just beyond Dawson City, and on all her trips she finds time apart from her official duties to seek out treasures of Canada's floral world. Finally, she tells us in her article, she finds the utmost joy searching the Capital City hills, which skirt the Capital City wherein she spends, of course, the most of her time as the Chateleine of Rideau Hall. She confesses to rare joy in the Canadian autumn about Ottawa. "No words can describe the glory of October days," she writes, continuing, "under sky translucently blue, white clouds above masses of dark hemlock, Weymouth pines, Scotch firs and snowy stemmed birches, dripping their golden leaves on the ground, maples clothe the Gattineau Hills in every tint of crimson, scarlet, ruby, russet, gold, amber and bronze that the mind of many can conceive, but which very few artists have the courage to try to portray."

That already the boarding houses are booking guests for the June ball at the Royal Military College. As this is the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the college many of the old graduates will be present and the ball will be a memorable one.

He had but turned a corner—still He pushes on with right goodwill Thro' mire and marsh, by heugh and hill

That self-same arduous way— That self-same upland hopeful way, That you and he through many a doubtful day, Attempted still.

He is not dead, this friend—not dead But in the path we mortals tread, Got some few, trifling steps ahead, And nearer to the end.

So that you, too, once past the bend, Shall meet again, as face to face, this friend You fancy dead.

Push gayly, strong heart! The while You travel forward mile by mile He lingers with a backward smile Till you can overtake.

And strains his eyes, to search his wake Or, whetting as he sees you through the brake, Waits on a stile.

The Editor Hears

That the boys and girls and the older people who are interested in birds should be on the lookout for a small bird who is paying Kingston a visit at present. On Sunday he was on a tree on Clergy street and his name is the Brown Creeper. He is a bird about five inches in length with rather a long bill, brown back with dark spots and streaks, a white breast tinged with yellow. His tail is not long, his legs, too, are short and he runs up the tree trunk as a nuthatch does, searching for insects. He is an industrious bird, and few insects escape his sharp eyes. He will, perhaps, although not likely, build a nest here in a hollow tree, and his little wife will lay her eggs there. But it is more likely that he will go farther on, or at least to the woods, where he and his mate will be undisturbed in the housekeeping.

That tonight the Old Boys and Old Girls of Queen's will meet each other once more in Grant Hall when the annual "Conversa" will be given by the Principal, staff, Alma Mater Society and Trustees of Queen's University. This function is unique in its own way. Old and young, fathers and mothers coming for perhaps the first time to the University to see the boys and girls graduate; the fathers and mothers who felt that there was no place like their own Alma Mater for their sons and daughters to take a degree; the staff of Queen's and their wives, the clergy, the military representatives and the honor graduates who tomorrow will be privileged to add several more letters after their names, will all be in the crowd and will all be enjoying themselves. Every kind of dress will be worn. Kingston women and girls will wear evening frocks, but the visitors who have perhaps motored to Kingston for the events at Queen's will wear afternoon dress and many men will not be in evening dress.

A BIT OF HEAVEN.

There's a bit of heaven about you If you'll only look around; You needn't search among the stars— You'll find it on the ground. It may be at your own fireside, If you have eyes to see; In fact, it may be anywhere, Whenever you may be.

If you should fail to find it, You will miss of life the best; For that little heaven about you Is love, and home, and rest. You need not think you've miss'd it Because your means are small, For this little bit of paradise Is in the reach of all.
