HUMAN NOTE DOMINANT IN 'FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE.'

Helpful Idea Underlies Hilarious Fun in New Harold Lloyd Film.

The humanisation of screen comedy can be directly attributed to Harold Lloyd. He, more than any other individual in the industry, has been responsible for lifting the movie fun-makers out of the rut of "slapstick" and elevating them to the high plane of evolution.

The process of evolution, which has been steadily advanced through "Grandma's Boy," "Safety Last," "Girl Shy," "Hot Water" and "The Freshman" is continued with his initial Paramount release appropriately entitled "For Heaven's Sake!" Advance reports indicate that the human note so dominant in all of Lloyd's previous productions is again a fundamental factor in his latest comedy.

Briefly, the story is that of a rich boy who discovers after a life of idle ease and luxury that real happiness is to be found in helping others. His experiences in the slums of a big city, where he goes to assist a hard-working, though none too successful missionary, are hysterically humorous, yet get over the thought Lloyd sought to impress when he started to make the picture.

Jobyna Raiston, who added feminine distinction to several of Lloyd's former successes, again lends her charm and beauty to the role of leading lady. It is for love of her that Harold goes through many laughable trials and tribulations in his effort to reform a group of hardboiled gangsters. "For Heaven's Sake" will open a four day's engagement at the Capitol, Wednesday, with a special morning matinee, Saturday, for children.

It was learned on Tuesday, that there is a hitch in the negotiations for the fitting out of the camp, and that members of the local association have been looking elsewhere for a site. However, nothing definite has been decided on in regard to the matter, although a meeting of the local association was held on Monday night, when the matter was under discussion but no definite action has been taken.

REMINISCENCES BY PROF. W. G. JORDAN

In an article The Toronto Globe on "Convocation Time," Dr. W. G. Jordan, of Queen's University says: When approaching the end of a public career, one is apt to yield to the reminiscent mood. The reminder that dotage and anecdote are perilously near the each other cannot alter the fact that to those who are growing old the past is rich in memories and the future too short to stimulate ambitious plans. One sometimes wonders why, after a long day's work, we are reluctant to quit the scene of our activities. I met a gentleman once who told me that if it was not for golf he would have to go back to business. But I think that the devotees of golf will always be a small proportion of the community. Students of science and history tell us that ten years have been added to the life of men who live in healthful conditions, so that the Psalmist's "three score years and ten" should not be taken too literally, and that the Chaucer's formula "sick or seventy" may, in some cases need little revision. Still, we must remember that when we say to ourselves: "In some respects I am as good as ever," this may be a kindly illusion of nature meant to let us down gently. But why linger so long over a preliminary point? Let us get to the Convocation.

About this time of the year 1898 there appeared in The Globe a report of Queen's Convocation, the first that I attended. The university had seen fit to make me one of its honorary graduates, and the reasons were given by Dr. G. M. Milligan of Toronto, then in his prime, whose generous tribute made one realize the difficulties of living up to the expectations of one's friends. Prominent figures on that day were Earl Minto, Principal G. M. Grant, Archbishop Gautier and Senator Sullivan. The recollection is still fresh of arriving at Kingston in the middle of the night and having to sit in a chair until 7 o'clock in the morning, when I discovered that a friend of mine had slept comfortably all night, and I suggested that some one else might have a turn. I do not know whether Kingston was thinking about a new hotel, but it has thought a great deal on the subject since.

Queen's New Buildings. When I first saw Queen's the foundation of the present system had been well and truly laid, but there was comparatively little to see. Now the campus is full of handsome buildings, devoted to literature, science, medicine and sport, built of the same material without mechanical uniformity, but with general harmony of design. I remember hearing Principal Grant make his statement to the people of Kingston that it meant being content with a small college doing mainly arts work, or going forward boldly to larger things. The fifty thousand dollars given for "Kingston Hall" was certainly a good investment for the city and the college. It would probably cost three times that sum today. In those days, we laid emphasis on the fact that it is not buildings but men that make a university, a fact that still needs to be remembered. My mind turns back to the men with whom I came first into contact, Watson, Dupuis, Capper, Goodwin, Macdonald, Ross, Knight, Short, Macnaughton, to mention only those who have since retired or turned to other fields of service. These men working together, would give distinction to any arts faculty. Of Dr. D. M. Gordon, who for sixteen years acted as Principal of Queen's, and in whose reign the constitutional changes took place, it is simply necessary to say that he fulfilled one's ideal of a cultured Christian gentleman. A university with such a history must, if true to its traditions, have a great future in a country that will see higher education more and more as time goes on.

An "Asset for Christianity." In those days I made a visit to Canada's largest city, and was taken to see an editor. Having great respect for editors, I had looked forward to this, but when the gentleman launched out into a vigorous denunciation of institutions and conditions my young friend the reporter felt rather uncomfortable. But, my love of the truth being stronger than my fear of editors, I quietly told the tale of Queen's as I understood it, of men working for their college and not for the bare living that it was then only able to give, and of "boys" getting a start in life, which, difficult as it was, would have been more difficult elsewhere. I was given a fair hearing, and the verdict was rendered: "In that case Queen's is an asset for Christianity." The administration then cramped into one small room, now has comfortable quarters in that fine building, the Douglas Memorial Library. The library itself is a conspicuous example of progress, with its staff of devoted workers. The extra-mural department is under efficient management and exerts a widespread influence. Certainly similar signs of progress may be seen all over the country, but we are each especially interested in our own centre of activity. It is to be hoped that theological education will regain its strength in the affiliated colleges, but that is a separate subject. Whatever the future has in store, the history of the past reminds us that Queen's, like all the ancient colleges, sprang directly from the Church and must find its strength in preserving the Christian spirit of freedom and service.
