THE WADDELL ACTION VIRTUALLY DISMISSED

Judgment Reserved, But Chief Justice Meredith Indicates the Result.

Although Chief Justice Meredith did not actually announce his judgment in the action of Waddell vs. Queen's University, which occupied a whole day of the Supreme Court non-jury sittings, but stated that he would write it out at Toronto, the case is practically dismissed, for His Lordship did not ask Mr. Francis King, K.C., the counsel for the defence, to present argument after Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C., Montreal counsel for the plaintiffs. The speaker was Mr. King. His clients would press for costs, and Mr. King replied that they would not, which means that the action is dismissed and that each side will pay its own costs.

Thursday afternoon session was taken up with the argument of Mr. Calder, counsel for plaintiff, who spoke for an hour and five minutes. Colonel Constantine was recalled to present certain exhibits.

Mr. Calder at the outset of his argument stated that the case rested on whether there was a contract. The foundation of the action, he said, was in the agreement between Queen's University and the Carnegie Foundation by which the advantages were stipulated for the third party. But the contract was communicated to the third party and by his contract he accepted the benefit and thereby acquired the right for himself and for his widow.

It was found in the documents which originated in 1919, that there were two letters which started the negotiations, one from Mr. Pritchard being of a personal nature. Certain questions were asked by Queen's feeling out for information. It had been laid down that there were two problems to be solved, that of looking after the professors and those that were to come after them, and then there was the transition period in which the professors, the University and the Carnegie Foundation contributed.

Mr. Calder proceeded to read the correspondence connected with leading up to the proposition on the terms provided. After October 1st, 1919, the contribution system was entered into. The plan provided to take care of the professors but it did not say in what way this was to be done.

Mr. Calder, therefore, submitted that Queen's had stipulated on behalf of Professor Waddell and other professors that they would be taken care of. There were two undertakings on the part of Queen's for the caring of the professors and for evolving a plan whereby this would be carried out. It was necessary that the third party should be advised and accept it. Dr. Waddell had been advised and had accepted it. He had resigned at one time because of status, salary and pension, but he had resumed, and later his status had been raised and his salary increased. He withdrew all when he had received notice of the proposal of the plan to be undertaken by the University.

Mr. Calder argued that it was an absolute undertaking on the part of the University under the plan, regardless of the Carnegie Endowment, to take care of him. Counsel argued that Queen's had not fulfilled the contract to look after its own men who could not contribute to this plan or to formulate a new one. Dr. Waddell had remained at the University as a result of the proposal that Queen's had made, and Mr. Calder contended that the widow of Mr. Waddell was entitled to adequate provision.

Speaking with regard to length of service, if Royal Military College qualifications required the equivalent of four years high school and had six professors, his status of service was established, Mr. Calder contended.

"To what extent is Queen's University responsible to Mrs. Waddell?" Mr. Calder asked. He asked why Queen's, when they had decided that no further pensions were to be granted, had not advised Dr. Waddell so that he could have accepted opportunities for other positions had he wished to accept them.

Colonel Constantine, during the setting forth of the argument by Mr. Calder, had entered the court room, and he was called to the stand. He had with him the records of the examination papers of the years 1895 and 1896, but the curriculum for 1897, which would tell the number of professors, was not found, but these examinations would cover the work that had been done in that time.

Colonel Constantine stated that during Professor Waddell's time there were six professors at the Royal Military College. Records which he produced were presented as exhibits.

A SPLENDID ADDRESS ON ROTARY PRINCIPLES

Rev. W. R. Tanton of Napanee the Speaker at Club's Luncheon on Tuesday.

"You should live so much with Rotary principles that you know them just as much as you know your own business."

The above are the words of Paul Harris, who had the honor of starting Rotary, and they were used by Rev. W. R. Tanton, pastor of Trinity United Church, Napanee, in closing a splendid address on "Rotary," before the members of the Kingston Rotary Club, at their noon-day luncheon in the British-American hotel on Thursday. The speaker was for some years engaged in the work of Rotary, and he made an earnest and most inspiring address in the interests of the Rotary movement, stressing three of the principles for which Rotary stands—good fellowship, work among the boys, and unselfish service to the community.

"I am sure we all recognize the fact that Rotary lives by its ideals. In the twenty-one years since it was organized, it has developed in a wonderful way. In all these years, every organization has undergone a critical examination, and Rotary has made the greatest development. Rotary has grown and is continuing to grow."

"And what are the principles we are stressing in Rotary? They were, no doubt, stressed by some people before Rotary came into existence, and they will have to be stressed even though Rotary goes out of existence. These principles have been accepted by Rotary and because of this fact, the work has been a great success. In the first place, Rotary calls for good fellowship. The busy business men are asked to get together and try and understand each other. And what is being done between man and man Rotary, is also being carried on between city and city. And Rotary is back of the League of Nations, and is doing everything possible to spread the gospel of good fellowship throughout the world."

Rev. Mr. Tanton gave a few minutes of his time to the question of the value of boy life, and referred to the steps being taken by Rotary to help on the good work. "Rotary is doing all it can to bring about better boyhood," he said. "Community service is also included in the work of Rotary. Every member is expected to give some of his time, and to use his influence to help the community in which he lives. In carrying out all these principles, Rotary will make a great contribution for a better world."

The speaker was tendered a hearty vote of thanks for his splendid address on motion of Rotarians Dr. P. H. Huyck and John W. Litton.

The members of the club also had a few words of greeting from Ernest Smith, president of the Brockville Rotary Club.

Rotarian Bert Abernethy presided at the meeting, and very ably carried out all the duties. The luncheon was well attended. Rotarian "Jack" Elder sang a number of songs in tip-top fashion, and also acted as leader for the good old Rotary songs, which were put over with lots of "pep." Sid Salsbury presided at the piano. Rotarians Harry Breathwaite and John W. Litton delighted the members and guests with their ever popular selection, "The Isle of Man."

Chairman Bert Abernethy put over a novel "stunt," when he called upon Rotarian L. T. Best, in a memory test. He asked him to give the names of all the members of the club present, with their classification. Rotarian Best carried out his task with flying colors, and at the close, he was the recipient of a very fine gift. Rotarian "Duff" Evans made the presentation with a neat speech.

Guests at the luncheon included Charles H. Bowman, of Pittston, Pa.; Rev. C. C. Washington, Courville, Ont.; Rev. Alfred Brown, Cobourg; Ernest J. Smith, president of the Brockville Rotary Club; Walter T. Rogers, Brockville; H. W. Ackerman, Belleville; Oliver Chown, Kingston; Rev. R. F. Stillman, Napanee; Rev. A. J. Terrill, Napanee; Rotarian Dr. P. H. Huyck and Mrs. Huyck will make a trip to Denver, Col., and while in Denver, Rotarian Huyck will represent the local club at the International Rotary convention.

Macassa Mines Limited.
This property has acquired additional claims adjoining its property in the Kirkland Lake camp. The company has an option on favorable terms to purchase the adjoining 102 acres, which will give it a total acreage of 244. It is proposed to make an offering of stock in due time, and to resume active mining operations. The area owner by the company has been held undeveloped for some years past, awaiting the result of mining operations carried on by the large companies on the adjoining property. The very favorable developments on the Teck Hughes property and the proving of ore by Kirkland Lake Gold have brought considerable values almost to the eastern boundary of the Macassa holdings.

The company will start with some $200,000 in cash in the treasury which will go a long way toward proving up the property. The geology is favorable, financing satisfactorily arranged, and the management in good hands. There is every reason to believe that the property has an excellent chance of making good.

The Board of Directors include Harry Oakes, president; Willis A. Matson, of Rochester; Gordon C. Edwards, Ottawa; Arthur G. Slaughter and Robert A. Bryce, Toronto.
