THE SQUARE PLAN HOUSE

By J. T. Finlay, Architect.
The nearer a house can be built in the form of a square, the less it will cost—the reason being that the walls enclosing a square are of the least length necessary to enclose a given area.
The logical position for the hall and staircase in such a plan is the centre of the house, so that all the rooms may be entered immediately from the hall.
In the accompanying house plan you have a nearly square which has many of these advantages. On the ground floor, you notice, the main front entrance door is approachable from the kitchen, without crossing the living-room, excepting at one end, thus leaving the occupants of that room undisturbed by the kitchen service.
On the first floor each bedroom is entered directly from the hall, which is merely an enlarged landing. All the rooms are of fair size, and have the very necessary cupboard annexed. A very commendable plan you must admit, and enabling the house to be erected at a minimum of cost, say $5,000.

It should be stated that the cellar is excavated under the entire house, ample room being provided for heating, laundry and storage. Regarding the size of the lot, it should have a frontage of at least forty-five feet, to admit of a side drive to the garage.
Built on concrete basement walls, this house would look well, finished in stucco, "pebble dash" or hand trowelled plastering on common brick or hollow tile. In either case the outer walls should be well rendered and strapped before lathing, to ensure a dry, warm house for winter use. Insulating the roof and first floor ceiling would be an additional precaution in this respect.
Casement sash in small lights have added quite a charm to this otherwise simple home, and the entrance door and trellis porch give the necessary character to this important feature.

The roof should be shingled with colored asbestos shingles—say a warm buff. The exterior walls of the house, if in brick, should be of a deep red with white joint. Paint the woodwork sage green or putty-gray. Hardwood floors are laid throughout the interior—a very necessary item of expenditure, and undoubtedly the most sanitary. Doors and trim in the dining-room are of hardwood, otherwise the finish throughout is pine for painting. Note the fireplace at the end of the living-room, beside which is placed the glass door leading to the sun porch. This house can be easily heated with warm air. Good plumbing and drainage is included in the estimate of cost.
Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications of this house should communicate with the architect direct. Address Mr. J. T. Finlay, 430 Talbot Street, St. Thomas, Ont. Copyright, 1926, MacLean Building Reports, Limited.
