ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS by Olive Roberts Bartor

The Nice Old Auntie. After Mister Tingaling and the Twins got Mrs. Brown Bear's rent money, they went down the hill and across the meadow to the buttonball tree on the edge of the woods. Colonel Possum had rented quite a large, beautiful apartment in the buttonball tree, and they were going to collect his rent.

WILD GEESE By Martha Oateno.

In the room where Anton lay, Caleb sat beside the sick man for nearly an hour. Caleb Gese was not the man to advance upon an objective ungraciously. Even a dying man had to be treated with diplomacy. "I have examined the hay, Anton," he began gently, "and it's half-sow chitless. Besides any amount of stink wood. You've got to learn to cultivate it, Anton." Then he went into a long discourse on the growing of tame hay, advising Anton what to do next year. Anton moved from side to side, trying to escape the pain that racked his body.

BOOTS AND HER BUDDIES

Answer to Saturday's Crossword Puzzle.

In the kitchen Caleb told Judith to wait for him. Then he went out and drove the mare down to the field where the Klovacs boys and Mark were already shocking the grain. In two or three weeks Anton would have the threshing here. He would have had for the winter. Then, too, he had a smaller hayfield farther away. But he would have no hay to sell in the markets to the south. He would have to sell some of his cattle soon, to get money to live on. Anton was well known for his fine cattle. They were all he had of any worth. How he had come by them so one seemed to know—a poor homesteader like him. Probably in questionable ways, Caleb thought—he was capable of anything, heathen that he was.

Indigestion

DR. A. W. CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. "I'm not, eh? We'll see if I'm not. Heh, heh! What I want to be, I am. And the likes of you won't stop me from being it." Mark leaned his elbow upon a fence post and looked down at him. "Is there anything in the world you care for as much as for yourself, I wonder, Caleb Gese?" he asked curiously. (To Be Continued.)
