Seeing the Capital. The Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday has the following: "Ottawa was invaded shortly before one o'clock by over 530 Kingstonians who journeyed to the Capital from Kingston on a special C.N.R. train. The excursion is under the auspices of the Kingston Industrial Exhibition. A number of O.E.R. street cars met the big party at Central station and conveyed a large proportion of the visitors to the Dominion Experimental Farm where luncheon was served by the farm-officials in the auditorium. There is no set programme for the party beyond the invitation to the farm. The return of the party home is also a go-as-you-please, no special train having been reserved to take the visitors back. Fortunately the day being fine, though cloudy at times, the visitors from the Limestone City are seeing the Dominion Capital under happy auspices."

Harold Visits Kingston. A Toronto Star writer, on a little tour, writes as follows from Kingston to his editor: Kingston. Dear Bet: Usually I start my letter to you with some of the scenery, but as Bob Bundy says, first things first. I asked at once on arriving here for your message and it hadn't come. This is a stony town. Most of the buildings are stone. Queen's penitentiary is stone and I'm stone broke. While Bob was making calls, Alice drove me around the city on the lookout for prospects, and we saw the Royal Military College, where they lock up the sons of well-to-do families who go wrong. But I must say they get an awfully smart uniform. One of the boys who was let out for the afternoon joined up with Alice and me when we were visiting the famous Marillo tower here, and I felt so small in the presence of such awank and beauty. Kingston is one of the oldest cities in Canada and it shows its age. It's from here you take the boat for the trip through the thirty thousand islands. Alice says nickle comes from Kingston, but she didn't show me the mines. But I did see the head office of the International Nickle Company and it looked like a great big jail. I am going to Ottawa to-night. —HAROLD.
