Originals at Camp Le Nid.
In July, 1886, six law students from Toronto pitched their tents upon Ruttan's Point, opposite Glen Island, and remained there for four weeks. Each successive year has witnessed their return, with gradual additions to their numbers. They chose the happy title "Camp Le Nid" as the name of their organization.

Although forty summers have passed since their first sojourn on the shores of the Bay of Quinte, four of the original number are expected to arrive this year. Mr. Gould, Baltimore, was the first to put in an appearance. He has missed only one season out of forty-one. Other members from Baltimore, New York, Pittsburgh, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, have signified their intention of being present at this session. Few bodies of fresh water possess the attractions of our bay, and strangers from a distance cannot understand why our own people do not make a better use of it for summer resorts.

As a fitting close to the day, the choir sat together in the moonlight singing to the music of a victrola and watching the beautiful lights of the harbor. Laidlaw's Daily Store News For Tuesday, July 20th

SPECIAL NOTICE

Watch this space for extra special Sale offering. Full explanation in Tuesday's paper.

Are these things not worth something to you?

Is it not gratifying to know that when you buy at home you are not only patronizing your own townspeople, but are at the same time, serving your own interest by encouraging the merchants to carry better assortments?

That you can buy at home in comfort, at ease, and with a feeling of confidence, knowing a complete adjustment is always to be had in case something goes wrong?

Also, that you do not have to wait for delivery, or take a chance on the article not being just what you thought it was as to color, quality or appearance?

If these things are not worth something to you, then the principle of business, of civic pride and the golden rule in general, needs some adjustment. If home means anything to us, surely the home merchant should be given preference over out-of-town concerns.
