KIWANIS CLUB PAYS VISIT TO GANANOQUE

Clubs such as the Rotary Club, the Canadian Club and so on.

What Kiwanis Is.
Kiwanis had produced a great many men and discovered many more, the speaker said. It was founded in 1915 and since that time its growth had been remarkable. With only a few men to start in 1915 it has grown to-day to 1,500 clubs with a membership of 100,000. It was the largest service club in the world, Kiwanian Mills said. He pointed out that the word "Kiwanis" had no meaning in itself but it was what Kiwanians made it mean. It was not a religious organization but it believed in God, it was not a relief organization but it did untold good in relief work, it was not a political organization but it believed in good government and it was not an education organization but it believed in good schools. It did not mean merely a good time for a group of men at meetings once a week but it taught the modern idea of the Golden Rule and that is what Kiwanis stood for.

The speaker declared that Kiwanis was a driving force tending toward newer and higher objectives and to-day it was doing what no other organization had ever thought of doing before. Kiwanian Mills stated that Kiwanis developed the spiritual side of a man in that it taught him not always to think of the material things of life. The success of nations, of communities and of individuals depended upon the spiritual force of men and that was what Kiwanis brought out in men. It stood for integrity, faith, industry, vision, thrift, and an interest in the other fellow.

The aims and ideals of Kiwanis, the speaker said, were to give advance to the human and spiritual side of the material, to advance the Golden Rule on a fifty-fifty basis, to promote the adoption of high and better business and professional life, to make more aggressive citizenship, to provide a man with the ability to form friendships and develop a community spirit and a public opinion that would make good will.

He explained the operations of a Kiwanis Club, pointing out that there must be a membership of 25 or over where men of different pursuits and activities would come together. Kiwanian Mills went into the organization end of such a club and pointed out some of the rules connected therewith, as laid down by International Kiwanis.

Making Good Citizens.
The speaker stated that one of the things in Kiwanis that was emphasized was in the proper development of the useful citizen. He declared that there were too many "useless good citizens" in cities and towns and one of the aims of Kiwanis was to make them useful. He meant by a useless good citizen, a man who centred his activities about his own home or his property without thought of helping the other fellow. Kiwanis, he said, helped those who needed help and it took in thousands of activities in carrying out this policy. In Kingston Kiwanis had done great good and he believed that it had a great future before it. The speaker told of the fifteen committees of Kiwanis and what their work embraced, thus showing the various branches of community life in which Kiwanis took part. Kiwanis stood for a brotherhood of men and membership in Kiwanis created an obligation to fellow men, to the community, to the country and to God.

Praised Kiwanian Mills.
A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker by Kiwanian Alan Melkolejohn who at the same time extended the congratulations of the club to the speaker on his election to Lieutenant-governor recently, this being his first appearance for the Kingston Club as such. He stated that the Kiwanis Club of Kingston was proud of Kiwanian Mills, a man who had risen from the ordinary membership ranks to the post of Lieutenant-governor of the district. His value to Kiwanis was great, he said.

During the meeting two solos were rendered by Mr. Skinner and quartette numbers were given by Messrs. Eys, Thompson, Donnelly and Saunders, who were brought down by Kiwanian R. J. Reid for the occasion. Bobby Howarth also rendered a couple of selections.

Kiwanis Motor Parade.
One of the features of the introduction of Kiwanis into Gananoque was the way it was handled by the motor vanguard. The Kiwanis, numbering over eighty, congregated at the Market Square at six o'clock and from that point the cars, decorated on the back, front and sides by Kiwanis emblems, left on their trip to the river town.

The parade was halted at the Causeway where the bridge was up. The long line of cars, extending from the lift, up past the Tete de Pont barracks created an unusual sight. After a delay while one of the Sowards' boats, the Patricias, had passed through, the parade was resumed without mishap. On arrival in Gananoque, a tour of the city was made, every horn on the cars being put to severe test throughout the trip. The towns certainly knew that Kiwanis had arrived and they warmly welcomed it.

D. L. Kennedy was instantly killed by a street car at Windsor.

A BIG NIGHT OF FUN FOR THE BOY SCOUTS

There Are Now Four Patrols in the First Kingston Troop.

Lots of fun for everybody, was the order of the programme at the meeting of the First Kingston troop of Boy Scouts Monday night at their headquarters. The attendance was very good, only two boys being absent. The patrols were finally arranged permanently, with five boys and a patrol leader making up each group. There are now four patrols in the troop, the Chipmunks, Wolves, Crows and Beavers. The case of the flag was won by the Beaver patrol, who had the most points for the night.

Acting Scoutmaster Miles took charge of the meeting, for the purpose of reforming the patrols. There were all kinds of games, instructive games, rough and tumble, and "what-not." At the meeting of the officers after the troop had left, it was decided to have the court-of-honor Thursday evening and the patrol leaders' instruction course to follow it. At this instruction course the patrol leaders will receive instruction, so that they may train their boys.

Building again for Greater Service

To the sound of the riveter's hammer and the song of the carpenter's saw, it rises... a fitting climax to the sixty years in which this institution has played a vital part in the promotion of Canada's welfare.

And it foretells an era of even greater service... for it will be devoted to the manufacture of the popularly priced Pontiac Six... the new member of the General Motors family whose success has already electrified the automotive industry.

Containing well over 100,000 square feet of floor space, the new Pontiac Six building is merely one phase of an expansion program involving $650,000.00 and affecting, directly or indirectly, all of the corporation's six different makes of cars.

New facilities and equipment... more modern machinery and more efficient arrangement of productive units... even greater provisions for a superior order of craftsmanship and quality—thus does General Motors of Canada reiterate its determination ever to serve its public better, ever to provide the maximum values that human skill and capable organization can produce.

By building again for greater service, General Motors both strengthens its powers to build a better car for every purse and purpose... and prepares itself to meet the ever-increasing demand for its newest product... a demand that spreads throughout the Dominion and the Empire overseas.
