CHAPTER LXXXV.

Leonie Day was crushed, but in no way conquered. The young woman had reserves of determination and a faith in herself that could remove mountains, so she proudly thought.

And after all, Mr. Sturtevant was much too 'slow' to suit her speed! If Lady Warrington could catch him, let her do it. She—Leonie—had other fish to fry.

But had she?

As the days went on, and friends and lovers faded, she began to think somewhat seriously of the future. Money was getting rather low, and hotel bills in this city were enormous.

She wasn't working either. The hat-shop idea was at an end. It would be possible, of course, to get a job, though this was the off season on millinery. Leonie was clever with her fingers, and cleverness is appreciated in New York.

But, at the moment, there wouldn't be enough money in it to compensate for the long hours, and—as she thought—the loss of prestige in the eyes of possible suitors. Which goes to show that Leonie had not 'gained the New York spirit.'

"I wonder who I can call up?" She had awakened early one morning with the heat, and—having had her bath and a light breakfast—was staring at the telephone as thought for inspiration.

At that very moment it rang loudly, causing her to jump.

"Miss Day? Good Morning. This is Jimmy Becker speaking. Friend of Holden's. You remember me?"

She did. Good-looking man with money, and a ranch out West. Miles had introduced him to her shortly after their arrival in New York. He had been interested in 'art,' and had purchased a couple of statues at Miles' exhibition, paying the high figure without a murmur. That was a good omen as to his financial status, wasn't it?

"Of course I remember you," gurgled the young woman into the instrument. "Charming men aren't so plentiful, are they, that I should forget?"

A hearty guffaw greeted this bit of flattery. He was no analyst of character, was Jimmy Becker where a pretty woman was concerned. He had pleasurable recollections of Miss Leonie, who had been at her brightest and best the day they'd met, some months ago.

"What would your young man say if he should hear you? I'm calling up to find out his address."

Leonie's face fell. She hadn't been the lure, then, after all!

"I don't really know. We—we aren't engaged any more."

An incredulous: "Wh-a-t?" came through the telephone.

"That's bad news. But—" as though hit with a sudden idea—it gives me belated insights."

The girl at the other end of the wire brightened. This sounded more hopeful, more like the thing.

"You want an innings, do you?"

"You bet your life I do!" (No mistaking the ardour in his tone.)

Ensued a pregnant pause. Leonie's brain was working rapidly. What form of diversion should she suggest? Perhaps best leave it to him, her 'bossy' method hadn't worked too well with Mr. Sturtevant.

"Hello there? It's going to be a grilling hot day in the city. What'd you say to running down to one of the beaches in my car—I've hired a machine for the two days I'm here—and go in swimming? Suit you, eh?"

Indeed it would. Nothing better. Leonie had a smart bathing suit that she had bought in Paris, and her figure really was one of her most potent charms. Why not display it for his delectation?

"Pity it's such a long way to Atlantic City. Maybe we'll make that trip another time? To-day I suggest a beach not far from Coney. Agreeable to you, huh?"

"Delightful," cooed Miss Leonie across the wires. "Will you call here for me?"

"I'll be around in half an hour."

She hung up the receiver with a smile of anticipation then hastened to robe herself in her most fetching frock.

Without a doubt this fellow was a "catch." Attractive, too, and not nearly so blunt as most western ranchers. Once married to him; she could polish up his manners even more. He was quite handsome, with a remarkably fine figure, though his suits were badly out. (She'd give him the address of Miles' London tailor, and he could spend for his clothes. They did make such a difference to a man's appearance. Or stay—maybe he could install a manager in that ranch of his—it was veritable gold-mine, wasn't it? and he and she could spend at least half the year in Europe. Leonie's thoughts darted far afield.)

She was ready and waiting when he came, her bathing garments neatly stowed away in a small leather dressing-case containing the cosmetics she would need for a day's outing. Leonie was no believer in nature's unaided.

"And why was the engagement broken off?" he inquired, as the two of them skimmed seawards in the handsome car.

She contrived a little sigh.

"Oh, another girl came between us."

"Wh-a-t?" (Why would he be below so? She must cure him of that trick. Still, it was flattering that he should be so utterly astonished, at the idea of anyone having the power to take a lover from her!)

"It's true. She'd had her eye on Miles for ages. Followed him out to America, and played her hand well." (A good thing that he hadn't evidently heard about the tragedy at the Larches, nor the story of her action at the inquest! Best keep that dark until she'd woven her spell about this man!)

GETTING SKINNIER EVERY DAY

Something Must Be Done and Done Right Now—Quick.

Hollows in Cheeks and Neck Growing Deeper Every Week

Tens of thousands of thin, run-down men—yes, and women, too—are getting discouraged—are giving up all hope of ever being able to take on flesh and look healthy and strong.

All such people can stop worrying and start to smile and enjoy life right now for McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets which any druggist will tell you all about are putting flesh on hosts of skinny folks every day.

One woman, tired, weak and discouraged, gained 15 pounds in five weeks and now feels fine.

We all know that the livers of Cod Fish are full of vitalizing flesh producing vitamins and these same vitamins of the highest class are found in McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets—sugar coated and as easy to take as candy.

And this shows what faith the makers have in McCoy's for they say: if any thin person don't gain at least 5 pounds in 30 days your druggist is authorized to give you your money back—and only 60 cents for 60 tablets. Ask Jas. B. McLeod, MacLeod's Drug Store, Branigan's Drug Store, or any live pharmacist anywhere in North or South America.

But be sure to get McCoy's, the original and genuine.

Australian National Band Visits Canada

For the first time in history, the people of Australia have sent out a representative band to Canada. Selected from every state in the Commonwealth of Australia, this group of 25 expert musicians will make a comprehensive tour of the Dominion under the name of "The Australian National Band," giving concerts at the principal cities along the way. They came to Canada directly from England, where they competed in the famous English Band Contest at Manchester. This completed a lengthy engagement in England. Previous to this the band spent six weeks in South Africa and in all, including engagements in Australia and New Zealand, the band has been on tour for the past ten months. The Canadian tour opened September 25th at Quebec, where the musicians arrived over the Canadian Pacific steamship lines. The reception given to the band at the Ancient Capital was excellent. Complete arrangements for concerts across the Dominion had been made by Lieut. H. Gladstone Hill, director of publicity and manager of the Canadian tour. In Montreal the Australian Band was featured in the McGill University Reunion celebrations on October 4th, to which function the band had been invited as guests. In the afternoon of the same day the band played for the march past of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, upon their visit to Montreal. One of the most noticeable features of the band is its versatility, grand opera, church music, and jazz, all being rendered with equal success and skill. When they cross Canada on the Canadian Pacific lines and sail for Australia from Vancouver they will have circled the globe.

"Never you mind, Miss Leonie. There are lots of fishes in the sea. Why—" with a great guffaw—"though my friends sometimes call me a poor fish, I'd be a mighty appreciative one, if I had a girl like you!"

She brightened up at once. This was the sort of thing she liked to hear.

Cleverly she got him on the subject of his ranch, and the prospects for the year. It came out that he had recently added a large tract of land to his property, and—joy of joys!—it had been found on it.

"Reckon I'll be a millionaire pretty soon," said he, complacently. Then he added knowingly—

"I'll need the money, too, with a wonderful girl like you in town to take about."

"I'd like to see the ranch," faltered Leonie, with becoming modesty.

He shot her a quick glance.

"Maybe you will, one day. It's a long journey, though."

She smiled enchantingly.

"It wouldn't seem a bit too far for me," she encouraged him.

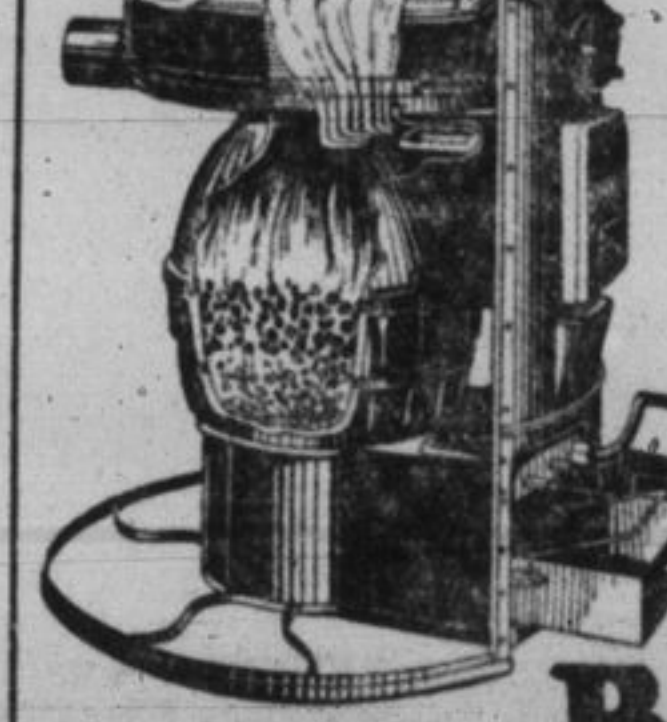

"Yes, things were looking up now, with a vengeance."
