"THE GIRL IN THE SECOND CABIN"

By E. J. RATH

Author of "The Nervous Wreck," etc.

The man pondered and stared at the pair who looked at him over the rail. "You'll never work her in," he growled. "We're expecting a tow," lied Trask.

Trask nodded and fought off another attack of vertigo. "We'll bring a line," said the man as he ordered his boat turned about and headed back for his own ship. "What does it mean, Billy?" demanded the girl.

It was a dirty tramp, bound north from Buenos Aires with a mixed cargo, and headed in to Galveston for a load of cotton. It was far different from the clean smartness of the Gulf Stream, yet it seemed luxurious by comparison to the hulk they left.

There was a woman aboard—the captain's wife. She surveyed Sidney without emotion or surprise, nodded understandingly and said: "I'll fix you out with some clothes." All of the proceeding, so completely commonplace was it, proved a blow to the ideals of the girl.

Trask sat heavily in a deck chair and his head dropped forward into his hands. It was the first time he had yielded to the racking pain across his forehead and the dizziness that now assailed him almost continuously. Sidney's quick eye caught his collapse. She ran to him and threw an arm around his shoulders.

"You two men!" she commanded, motioning to a pair of deckhands who stood gaping at the rescued ones. "Take him below—into the cabin. Which stateroom, captain?" "The first officer's," said the master of the tramp, with a nod.

"Gently, now!" she ordered, as the men grasped Trask by the arms and assisted him to his feet. "It's up to me now," she muttered to herself. "I mustn't give in!"

now than they had been aboard the derelict. Nothing concerned her save the fever-stricken man in the mate's stateroom. "Sit here in the doorway and watch him!" she ordered, beckoning to the boy. "If he wakes, call me at once. I am going to talk to the captain."

"Captain, when do we reach Galveston?" "It'll be about forty-eight hours, miss." She uttered an exclamation. "We must get there sooner. He is very sick."

"But you must!" she exclaimed. "This man may die. I've got to get him ashore!" "Sorry, miss. But this is a salvage job, and it looks like a good one. I can't let go now. He'll probably come through all right."

"Of course not," he answered. "And I don't know that I am. I'm not to be blamed if he dies. Likely enough he'll pull through, anyway." "But you have no right not to give him his chance!" she stormed. "I demand that you cut that thing adrift!"

"Don't make a fuss, miss," he advised her. "I've seen lots of them with fevers, and lots of them get over it."

DEATH OF MRS. N. H. BEECHER.

She Was One of Oldest Residents of Toledo, Ont. Toledo, Nov. 19.—There passed away at her home, here, on Tuesday last, Nov. 16th, a splendid character in the person of Mrs. N. H. Beecher. Her maiden name was Melinda Bell, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Bell. Her mother's name was Sarah Jane Horton. Mrs. Beecher was born in Frankville eighty-two years ago and was one of the oldest settlers in this locality.

The friends of the late Gershum Patterson, Easton's Corners, were greatly shocked to hear of his untimely death and a good number of friends from here attended the funeral. He was buried in the Anglican church cemetery of Easton's Corners. Mr. and Mrs. D. Rogers, daughter and son were visitors on Sunday last at P. J. McNamee's.

The Orange assembly dance held in town hall, on Nov. 16th, was a great success. They sold over 115 tickets and all ladies went free.

The champion sneak thief lately did a neat trick in a German city. About two hours after his release from jail he sneaked into the prison and stole his photograph from the rogue's gallery.

Joseph Carroll, Sandhurst, died suddenly on Saturday. A widow, two sons and five daughters survive. He was a leader in St. Paul's church there.

And, Eardley Wilmut is a candidate for the majority of Belleville.

The Tone of the Music Itself is the tone of the Orthophonic Victrola when it plays the new V. E. Process Victor Records.

LITERALLY, of course, the Orthophonic Victrola has no tone of its own. The tones you hear are the tones of the singer or musician. The new Orthophonic Victrola neither adds to nor takes away. Victor tone is the tone of the music,—not too thin, not "pinched" not too loud, not unnatural. Correct volume that comfortably fills the living room. Not blaring, nor glaring like an unshaded lamp. Sweet, natural tones that fall pleasantly upon the critical ear.
