

POETRY.

SONG,

OF THE PORTUGUESE PEASANT BOY.

The ground-work of the following beautiful fancies is laid not very remote from those fields where the English and French warriors are now, perhaps, drenching their sabres in each other's blood. They are said feelingly to describe the mild yet ferocious—leader, yet vindictive character of the Portuguese peasantry. [Morning Post.]

THE beacon is blazing bright, father,
And strong is the cannon's shock;
And see what a swarthy light, father,
Stains the peak of Alverca's rock.

'Twas the tramp of an English courier,
Which clatter'd so quick on the moor,
For I saw the soldier's sabre
Flash bright, as he dash'd by the door.

So, take down the good old brand, father,
But lend me my brother's dirk;
'Tis light in a stripling's hand, father,
And fit for a stripling's work.

Then away to the midnight battle;
But soft o'er the threshold tread,
Lest my mother should hear your foot fall,
And scream as we leave the shed.

Still brighter the beacons blaze father,
And stronger the cannon's shock,
And the smoke has hid the rays, father,
Which flash'd round Alverca's rock.

One kiss on the cheek of my mother,
One kiss will not break her sleep;
Then away for the midnight battle—
Then away for Alverca's sleep.

DIVERSITY.

SIGNS.

IF you see a man and woman, with little or no occasion, often finding fault, and correcting each other in company, you may be sure they are man and wife. If you see a gentleman and lady in the same coach, in profound silence, the one looking out on one side, the other at the other side, never imagine that they mean any harm to one another, they are already honestly married. If you see a lady accidentally let fall a glove or a handkerchief, and a gentleman next her kindly telling her of it, that she might gather it up—man and wife. If you see a lady presenting a gentleman with something sideways, at arm's length, with her head turned another way, speaking to him with a look and accent different from that which she uses to others, it is her husband. If you see a man and woman walking in the fields in a direct line twenty yards distance from one another, the man strides over a stile and goes on sans ceremonie, you may swear they are man and wife without fear of perjury.

If you see a lady whose beauty and carriage attracts the eyes and engages the respect of all the company, except a certain gentleman, who speaks to her in a rougher accent, not at all affected with her charms, you may be sure it is her husband who married for love and now slight's her. If you see a gentleman who is covetous, obliging and good natured to every body, except a certain female who lives under the same roof with him to whom he is unreasonably cross and ill-natured, it is his wife. If you see a man and female continually jarring, checking and thwarting each other, yet under the kindest terms and appellations imaginable, as MY DEAR, &c. they are man and wife.

RAT POWDER.

THE village of Croyden was lately visited by a man, who held in his hand a small casket containing a considerable number of packets neatly sealed up, which he offered for sale, remarking that they contained a powder that was a sovereign remedy against the existence of rats, wherever it was properly administered. Several persons attracted by the vender's cries, and no doubt annoyed by the troublesome vermin to which he alluded, approached him, and asked the price of his produce, to which he replied, they were only sixpence each. He was then asked in what manner the dose was to be applied, but he prudently declined giving his instructions until the medicine was bought. The price not being very high, he soon obtained a numerous body of purchasers, and having at length emptied his basket, and pocketed the cash, he informed his credulous customers, that the best mode of administering the powder contained in the paper would be, to watch until the rats were asleep, and then to pour a quantity into their ears, the consequence of which he observed would be certain death. Having given this important information, he walked off, leaving his auditors in the utmost astonishment at finding themselves thus duped. On opening the packets they were found to contain some excellent sand. [London paper.]
