A MOTHER'S LAMENT OVER HER INFANT.

" He was delighted with the work of his own hands ; he face that it was beautiful, he made it good, and took it to bimfelf."

I HAD a daughter, sweetly fair, With mild blue eye, and auburn hair, A dimple too in either check, And cherry lips-fhe just could speak.

Oft in her eyes I us'd to gaze, Delighted with her infant ways, And play'd, and look'd, and play'd again--So watchful never to give pain,

That she was pleas'd and seldom cry'd Except when fomething was deny'd, Which sterner duty order'd fo, And this, forfooth, would cause her woe :

But then it went fo foon away, That she did little else but play: She just could run—I think I lee Her infant form approaching me;

A bunch of flowers in either hand, Like little fylph from fairy land. She rooted was within my heart, So that I thought I could not part

From the fweet babe, I lov'd her fo; But Still I know that She MUST go! My lov'd Eliza now is gone! But why should I her loss bemoan?

Through glass of faith, I plainly see, That the is happier far than me, Her golden harp the tunes to fweet, While fitting at her Savior's feet !

That I should like to go and hear, I sometimes think and shed a tear-(No tear of forrow, but of jay.) The hymns which now my child employ !

Far from the wars, which roar fo near, She's landed fafe, and free from tear; She's met a lovely fifter there, Who, like herfelf, was good as fair:

Angels do fit, and liften round, (I make no doubt) on heavenly ground; And every voice in chorus raile, To fing the great Redeemer's praise!

" It was a beautiful flower; it was committed to my care, and I watched over it with the tenderest affection, but I loved it, perhaps too well, and it was taken from me in mercy."

DIVERSITY.

THE NEW YEAR.

On the first day of the first month, set in order the things that are to be fet in order."

The following extracts are from one of the numbers of the Lay Preacher, from the above and are as applicable now as they were then.

"WHILE all around him are repeating the compliments of the feafon, and, with jocund voices, withing each other a happy new year, the Lay Preacher, with affectionate zeal, will fuggest plans by which these annual wishes for felicity may be realized.

"Most men are criminally idle. I confels, with candor, that I loiter and slumber much, and, while I preach industry to others, am myfelf a caft away. But the fun who darts his reproachful rays through the curtain, undrawn at nine o'clock, feems to upbraid my fluggishness, and to wish that I would announce to the lazy of my flock that they will not, like him, at once shine and be of use, imless like him they rife seasonably. My readers are, therefore, vehemently exhorted early to extinguish their candles, and to see the day lamp, which neither sputters nor flares, whose wick never burns out, and whose oil never fails. All who wish that the year may be happy, must rigorously observe this injunction. No complaints must be heard of the chill of winter mornings, or the shortness of summer nights, but as foon as the above lamp begins to glimmer, let them rife and work. They will from be convinced that it is so ingeniously contrived, its radiance will not offend the eyes, nor its exhalations taint the lungs, like the vulgar tapers of midnight.

" Inflead of employing the usual expresfion, a happy new year, it would, perhaps, be an improvement to vary the phrase, and adapt it to the character of the person who is addreffed. "If I meant that a fluggard should enjoy a happy year, I would wish him an active and laborious one. I would apply to some clamorous carman, or some importunate client to bellow at his window at the dawn of day. would even advance a dollar from my fman falary, to purchase a couple of cocks to crow him up to exertion. The year of the idler would then undoubtedly be happy. You would hear from him no complaints of fpleen or nervous diforders. He would have no bill to pay the anothecary for pills to cure inalgefuon. You would fearcely hear a yawn from him during the prolixity of a winter's eve. His mind would be agreea; bly engaged. His hands would be employed by Utility, his heart would throb with Pleasure, and his eye be brightened by Hope. He would not only ' fet things in order on the first day of the month,' but habit would cause order to regulate his occupation during the year.

"Were I to compliment a man of feeble knees,' whole eyes are red, whole handle are paralytick, whose perceptions are diffuse bed, and whole purfe is impoverished by 'tarrying late at the wine,' I should wish him a foler year. I should wish, when he bellowed for the third bottle of Burgundy, that his landlord might be fleepy, and that the waiter might thumble; that all the liquor he fwallowed instead of raising would deprets his spirits; and that he might peruse serioully that chapter of the prophet, which denounces ' woe to the drunkards of Ephraim."

"The with for gamblers must be expresfed in a very extraordinary and enigmatical manner. Instead of a bappy new year, it would be the duty of their real friends, to pray that it might be an unlucky one. An tinlucky year would be a year of jubilee to the gamelter. It would produce a thorough reformation. Should the friendly wish for ill luck be realized, and the gamester neither hold four by bonors, nor the odd trick, what a clear faving to his purfe, his health, and his time! He would foon confider cards as the emissaries of misfortune, he would endeavor to grow rich by furer calculations, he would not only endeavor to discard the knave from his band, but from his conduct, and be more anxious to turn the penny, than a trump.

"The wish for the shy bachelor and the coy maiden, is, that, tired of a cold and comfortless celibacy, they may agree during the prefent froity, or approaching vernal feafon, to make vows to Matrimony and keep them with the purett good faith. May their wedding ring be always bright, and may their honey moon, with genial radiance, glow intenfely, not merely for a month, but cheer and gild many a blifsful year."

ORIENTAL ANECDOTE.

A learned man made a practice of placing himself at a mosque, and preaching to the people. One of the congregation wept conitantiy. One day the preacher faid, "My words make great impression on this man's heart, which is the reason of his crying so much." Others observed thus to the man that wept. " The learned man does not make any impression on our minds: what kind of a heart must you have, to be always in tears?" He answered, "I do not weep at his discourse; but I had a goat, of whom I was exceedingly fond, when he grew old, he died; now whenever the learned man fpeaks and wags his chin, the goat comes to avords, in the Port Folio of January, 1803; my remembrance, for he had just such a long beard."

> In a church a few miles from London, the priest was repeating that part of the Litany which offers up prayers "for all those who travel by land or by water," &c. when the clerk suddenly exclaimed, " Except my wife, who eloped from me two days ago."

In a morning paper, Mr. McGlue announces a separation from his sponse. We should suppose a husband so tenacious of his rights as this adhesive name indicates, would stick close to his partner.

An advertisement in an Irish paper, setting forth the many conveniences and advantages to be derived from metal window sasses, among other particulars observes, that " these fashes would last forever; and afterreards, if the owner had no use for them, they might be fold for old Iron."

Two fuitors in chancery, being reconciled to each other, after a very tedious and expensive suit, lately applied to an artist to paint a device, in commemoration of their returning amity and peace. The artist accordingly painted one of them in his shirt, and the other stark-naked.

The learned gentleman, who has written on the diseases of the tongue, attributes them all to the want of reft.
