SINGULAR INTREPIDITY.

The King v. Maurice Noonan.

In this case, tried at the Cork Assizes, the prisoner stood indicted for a burglary, and attempt to rob the house of Sir John Purcell at Highfort, on the night of the 11th of March last. The trial excited considerable interest, & the Court was crowded at an early hour on Monday—every body seemed anxious to hear the narration of a transaction, in which on one side though the guilt exhibited may be but too frequently equalled, the courage, intrepidity and coolness displayed on the other, has been never exceeded, and seldom indeed has it been matched in the history of human resolution.

Sir John Purcell, the first witness called, deposed a most interesting and manly statement, the substance of which only we pretend to report. He said, that on the night of the 11th of March last, about one o'clock at night, & after he had retired to bed, he heard some noise outside the window of his parlour. He slept on the ground floor in a room immediately adjoining the parlour. There was a door from one room into the other, but this having been inconvenient, and there being another passage from the bed-chamber more accommodating, it was nailed up, and some of the furniture of the parlour placed against it. Shortly after Sir John heard the noise in front of his house, the windows of the parlour were dashed in, and the noise occasioned by the feet of the robbers in leaping from the windows down upon the parlour, appeared to denote a gang not less than 14 in number, as it struck him. He immediately got out of bed, and the first determination he took being to make resistance, it was with no small mortification that he reflected upon the unarmed condition in which he was placed, being destitute of a single weapon of the ordinary sort. In this state he spent little time in deliberation, as it almost immediately occurred to him that having supped in the bed-chamber on that night, a knife had been left behind by accident, and he instantly proceeded to grope in the dark for this weapon, which happily he found, before the door, leading from the parlour into the bed-chamber, had been broken. While he stood in calm but resolute expectation that the progress of the robbers would soon lead them to his bed-chamber, he heard the furniture which had been placed against the nailed-up door expeditiously displaced, and immediately afterwards this door was burst open. The moon shone with great brightness, & when this door was thrown open, the light streaming in through three large windows in the parlour, afforded Sir John a view that might have made an intrepid spirit not a little apprehensive. His bed-room was darkened to excess, in consequence of the shutters of the windows, as well as the curtains being closed; and
