From the Catskill Recorder.

"WHERE ART THOU?"

Never perhaps was the soul of a mortal harrowed with more dreadful sounds than was that of our first fallen father, when he heard this awful interrogation from the lips of the Lord God, from whose all-piercing eye he was vainly endeavoring to hide himself in the groves of Eden.

In gazing upon that momentous scene—in listening to that terrible voice of the Almighty—we are not, as in perusing productions of the imagination, to consider ourselves unconcerned spectators. As is the root, so are the branches. We are progenitors of that disobedient parent. Growing up in habitual transgression of the divine commands which require cheerful and continued obedience, we are also obnoxious to our Creator; and the question "where art thou?" should be considered by every one of us as addressed to his own heart.

"Where art thou?" O my soul! In a world created by a Being of infinite benevolence—in a world which at its formation was pronounced good. Nor is that Being changed—he is the same yesterday, to day and forever; nor is the world altered, except that its only rational inhabitant is defiled by sin.

By the wise constitution of the universe, nothing but holiness can ensure final triumph and joy; but thou art unholy. In this state, anguish awaits thee; for infinite benevolence must as necessarily punish sin as reward holiness. Then to answer the purpose of thy existence, this fountain of bitter waters must be made sweet.

"Where art thou?" O my soul! In which of the numerous hosts art thou enrolled—in the ranks of the enemy of righteousness, or in the army of the living God? Hast thou submitted to the only way whereby God sees fit to prosper his children in his affectionate creatures, by penitence and faith? or art thou still at variance with the Deity, and desiring like thy first father, to hide thyself from his presence? If so, thy boasted goodness will prove insufficient. The fountain will be found corrupt. Press this inquiry with ardor: for interminable events, in which thou art supremely interested, hang upon thy cordial conclusion.

Brief Scripture Remarker.

A Village Patriot.

The footway from Hamptonwick through Bushypark, (a royal demefine) to Kingston-upon-Thames, had been for many years shut up from the public. An honest shoemaker, Timothy Bennet, of the former place, "unwilling" (it was his favourite expression) "to leave the world worse than he found it," consulted an attorney upon the practicability of recovering this road for the public good, and the probable expense of a legal process for that purpose. "I do not mean to cobbler the job," said Timothy, "for I have seven hundred pounds, and I should be willing to give up the arul, the great folks might not keep the upper leather wrongfully." The lawyer informed him that no such sum would be necessary to try the right; then said the worthy shoemaker, "as sure as soles are soles, I'll stick to them to the last;" and lord Halifax, the then Ranger of Bushy-park, was immediately seized with the regular notice of action: upon which his lordship sent for Timothy, and on his entering the lodge, his lordship laid, with some warmth, "And who are you that have the assurance to meddle with this affair?"

"My name, my lord, is Timothy Bennet, shoemaker, of Hamptonwick. I remember, an't please your lordship, to have seen, when I was a young man sitting at work, the people cheerfully pass by my shop to Kingston market; but now, my lord, they are forced to go round about, through a hot sandy road, ready to faint beneath their burthens; and I am unwilling to leave the world worse than I found it." Thus, my lord, I humbly represent, is the reason why I have taken this work in hand." Begone," replied his lordship, "you are an impertinent fellow." However, upon mature reflection, his lordship, convinced of the equity of the claim, and computing the shame of a defeat by a shoemaker, deflected from his opposition, notwithstanding the opinion of the crown lawyers, and re-opened the road, which is enjoyed by the public without molestation to this day. Honest Timothy died about two years after, in the 77th year of his age, and was followed to the grave by all the populace of his native village.

The Importance of Agriculture.

The want of a due estimation of the pursuits of Agriculture is, in many countries, a grand impediment to its progress. Where the cultivation of the soil is regarded with contempt, or as beneath the attention of men of standing and education, it will be entrusted to the management of persons of narrow capitals and still narrower minds. Such prejudices operate in various places. In almost every part of the United States they are fortunately rapidly dissipating and agricultural pursuits are viewed, as they should be, as the basis of our strength and prosperity, and therefore, worthy the attention of the wife and good. Many of our best citizens, who were distinguished in the field and in the cabinet, are now to be found on their farms devoting their time and attention to the occupation of husbandry, as the surest means of gaining an honorable subsistence and of doing good to their country by thus encouraging and patronizing this first of arts.

An idea, however, yet too generally prevails, that young men and many of those who have fine landed estates, must, of necessity, study and pursue some public profession, the pursuits of agriculture being too low and mean to engage their talents and attention.

Agriculture when studiously pursued, is calculated to call into action every noble and improved faculty of the mind, and is capable of being aided by the most interesting branches of the sciences; and in the late improvements which it has undergone, it has been shown that some of its most important principles are derived from and illustrated by chemical doctrines. The objection, therefore, that young men would have no employment for their talents and learning, were they to engage in the pursuits of agriculture, is entirely groundless.

I consider the infensibility to the magnitude of the subject, to be the greatest obstacle in the way of advancement, which agriculture has to encounter. The first preparatory step towards its improvement, is to satisfy the minds, not noly of farmers, but of the community at large, that it is an object of primary importance; and not attainable, in perfection by mere farmers. If this be not accomplished, efforts to introduce any thing like system, or principle, will be arduous indeed.

A Farmer should be considered, by himself, as well as by all other members of the community, as one placed in a situation to perform the most beneficial services to the public, by exercising a calling in which all other citizens are peculiarly interested. He may be personally, no better or worse than others; but the art in which he is engaged, is the most essential, of all others, to the general welfare; an art which should be encouraged and supported by all manner of citizens. Agriculture having been not only the first of Arts, in priority of time, but the first in the estimation of the wisest and greatest men in every age, should ever be deemed the first object, both of public and private attention. Power, especially that delegated by the people, should extend its arm, and open its hand, for its aid and protection. Wealth should unlock its coffers for its encouragement; science and every mental acquirement should be liberally bestowed, when instruction is required, as it always has been, by tillers of the earth; whose occupation, in a great degree, excludes them from opportunities of gratifying scientific knowledge, and a capacity for philosophical research. Commerce should yield to the support of Agriculture, a share of those profits whereof it is the source; and manufactures should bestow a willing tribute to the art, on which their existence depends. Those who devote themselves to the learned professions, should render to it, both homage and contribution. Their usefulness and gains, would be small indeed, among shepherds and hunters—and those were, for the most part, the employments of men, before agriculture widely diffused its blessings and mainly contributed, not only to the civilization, but to the happiness, wealth, subsistence and safety of
