Pruning Fruit Trees.

The following remarks, we believe, are from a source which entitles them to the attention of farmers. Observed in your present week's paper, a call on farmers, by saying that prudent ones will not let this season of the year pass, without pruning their fruit trees, and stating the good effects it will have, &c. The good effect of feasonable and proper trimming of fruit trees, is obvious to every person who has paid much attention to the culture of fruit; but from observation I have made for 20 or 30 years past, I am thoroughly convinced that the former method of pruning trees in March and April is very injurious to orchards, and particularly to nurseries which have been long neglected, and require much trimming. I have observed small trees, which have, in consequence of a close trimming in March, died by reason of the drying winds penetrating the wounds so deep, and letting such a quantity of the sap and moisture escape before the sap begins to move up, and supply the loss. In this case the bark adheres to the wood, in such a manner, that it is not in the power of the sap again to ascend; and of course the sapling dies. But this is not apt to be the case with larger trees, when deprived of those supernumerary branches, which in ordinary cases will require to be taken off; but they will nevertheless suffer great damage by such amputations at this season of the year. If a limb of any considerable size is cut several inches from the body in March, the stump will become dry and crack open nearly to the body; and before the new growth can heal over the wound, the stump will rot, and this defect will soon penetrate to the heart of the tree, and the whole will soon decay. Whoever will take the trouble to observe old orchards, which formerly were trimmed in March, will find, that almost every instance in which a limb of any considerable size had been taken off, instead of the wound being healed, an the tree sound and healthy a large cavity is found, beginning at the wound and rapidly increasing towards the heart, which soon deprives the tree of health and vigor. In almost every instance where I have taken off a limb in June, when the tree is full of sap, if the stump be left smooth, the new growth immediately commences its healing operations, and instead of decaying and dying, the wound is soon healed over, and the tree remains found and flourishing. I believe the best time in the year for trimming trees is when the tree possesses the greatest quantity of sap, which I think is not far from the middle of June. Many farmers do not commence trimming their young orchards so soon by five, and in some cases, by ten years, as they ought. They say the tree grows well and bears well, and why should I meddle with it? The fact is, many of our orchards are set in good fertile land, and their growth is rapid and in many instances send out three or four times as many branches as the root is able to support in old age; and if they are suffered to remain, the tree will soon dwindle and become shrubby, and die: or, if the branches are taken off when they are large, the tree will be much more injured, than it would have been, had they been taken off smaller.
