

From the Farmer's Magazine.

ON THE DISEASES OF TURKIES.

MR. EDITOR,

I do not think you have been very attentive to the feminine department of the economy of a farm, nor very kind to farmers' wives. You have been most industrious in pouring instruction of every kind upon the husband (and surely all gratitude is due,) but why neglect his better half? The farmer's wife has many evils to combat-much perplexity to encounter-perhaps, too, not a little to learn; but she is almost left to her native ignorance, for all that you seem to care :- this is not right, and can be remedied. We have a call upon you, and you should consider our little wants, and numerous difficulties, as I find has been done elsewhere.

You know very well that the farmers' wives now think of a little smattering of French, and music, and other fine things, for our girls, -such fine things as would have confounded the Gudewife of last century. T'other day, my daughter was reading a French periodical paper, and she called out to me, with much joy, that she had now found a cure for the trouble that had destroyed my turkies. The whole flock being gone, no experiment could be made of its success; but as I have often suffered the same vexatious loss, I am determined to try it another season.-My daughter has made a translation; and if you think it of use it may be inserted for the benefit of your female friends. September, 1812.

Description of a kind of Dropsy in the Crups of young Turties. By M. Lig-

Among the different kinds of domestic animals there is one, to the diseases of which little attention is given; and yet it is one of the greatest delicacies of our tables: I mean the birds of our poultryyard. Few authors, even to this day, have employed themselves in writing of their diseases; they are, however, subject to the most cruel of them, which destroy, in a short time, the most healthy. We have seen an example of this in a kind of dropsy of the crop, which has attacked the young turkies of Picardy.

Symptoms.—This kind of dropsy is announced by a dull look, paleness of the head, loss of appetite, and aversion to food. The birds allow themselves to be approached and seized with facility, and they are without strength. Very soon, a slight swelling of the crop is added to these symptoms, which in ten days becomes very considerable. I have taken nearly a pint of water from one. By pressing upon the crops of some of them, a certain quantity of matter is discharged by the bill, but never enough entirely to ease the crop. All these symptoms increase, and the bird dies at the end of fifteen or eighteen days' illness. These slight symptoms must have announced the disease: but the little attention paid to them by those who are in the habit of taking care of these animals renders it not so easy to observe it.

Appearances on dissection .- The inside of the crop contained a quantity of black liquid, of a strong smell, mixed with gravel. The membrane viscous, and having a tendency to gangrene; the gizzard did not contain any thing but the small stones necessary to digest the food: but the intestines were inflamed, and on them were to be seen the same spots as on the crop. All the animals who were attacked were extremely lean.

Causes .- I then sought after the cause of this disorder, and it was easy to find that it was occrainned by the stagnant water of which these animals had drunk. In the course of the year, the heat had been great, and there was little rain. The heat had hatched a vast swarm of small red worms resembling ascarides. It is quite certain that these insects must have been swallowed by the turkies; and from this cause, and the bad quality of the water which they had drunk, a great degree of inflammation in the crop would ensue, with a stoppage of the passage which conducts to the gizzard. The water would thus be detained and decomposed in the first vacancies, and would produce the consequences which we have just been examining. The effects, as might be expected, would be gradual and imperceptible at first. It is only by the frequent use of the water that they become in a high degree painful.

Treatment .- I divided the turkies into two classes ;-for those who were still sound I ordered grain and good water. With all that were diseased I practised the operation of tapping with a lancet in the lower part of the crop. I injected at the opening, by means of a small syringe, a slight decoction of quinquina (Jesuit's bark,) mixed with a little brandy -which was repeated twice in the course of the day. Next day the wound was better marked. I made again the same injection; and, two hours after, I forced them to eat a little of the yolk of an egg, mixed with some crumbs of bread. At the end of three days the wound in the crop was closed-which I might have prevented-but finding a natural opening in the bill, I made them take, during eight days, in their drink, the same substances which had been injected; and they were, by degrees, put upon their usual diet. I need not add that clear water was given them instead of that of the standing pools. Ten of these animals had died before my arrival; two perished during the treatment, and the rest of the flock, which might be about forty, either escaped the disease or were cured.

Note.-The Poultry-yard is a most proper department for a female writer on husbandry; and it is but too true, that, like the farmer's garden, it is too often neglected. This paper was therefore very gratefully received, and is inserted with pleasure. It shall not be our fault for the future if iastruction is withheld from this lady, who has censured us with so much good nature, or from others in similar situations. But that this may be in our power, we must request to be favoured with such communications as the present; and particularly, with the result of the intended experiment. It would be inexcusable not to add, that the young lady displays, in her translation from the French author, much more than a smattering of learning. We cordially wish her a numerous and healthy flock of turkies in the ensuing season. - Con. A STATE STATE OF THE PROPERTY AND A STATE OF THE STATE OF
