The Ladies of Ancient times and the Modern Fine Ladies.

A NEW SONG, BY ****

To the Tune of "The Old Courtier and the New."

With an old song made by an old ancient pate,
Of old ancient customs long since out of date;
Of ancient times when women did not scold or prate, For the ladies, Heaven mend 'em, are grown very impudent of late,
Unlike the ladies of old times,
And the old ancient ladies.

With an old fashion for ladies to stay abroad at school,
At least long enough to learn not to play the fool,
With an old governess who had absolute dominion and rule,
And look'd as grave and demure as an old swan in a pool,
Like the ladies of old times, &c.

With an old sampler whereon was work'd the Lord's prayer,
And the ten commandments done in small space with neatness and care, And mark'd in one corner with a lock of the lady's own hair,
And many little stags and hounds taking the air,
Like the ladies of old times, &c.

With a healthy complexion and colour un-faded,
Which needed not a cash or umbrella to shade
it,
With a head no higher than nature made it,
With a plain gown for work-days, and a Sunday's one brocaded,
Like the ladies of old times, &c.

With an old custom of getting up at five o'clock every day,
And of coming down stairs without the least delay,
With a long walk before breakfast, be it December or May;
Therefore the ladies of those days were healthy and gay,
Like the ladies of old times, &c.

With an old receipt book, very well wrote,
How to make a emulsion, how to cure a sore throat,
How to preserve either cold or hot,
And how to cure the bite of a mad dog, which no family should be without,
Like the ladies of old times, &c.

With modesty and patience, and tolerably resign'd,
Till their lovers should think proper to declare their mind:
—But the ladies of our days are not so inclin'd, As by the ensuing ditty you shall quickly find,
Like the ladies of modern times,
And the modern fine ladies.

Who talk a great deal of nonsense, and think it very fat,
Which is call'd by the young gallants very agreeable chat;
But if question'd in their catechism look very flat,
And declare, with an air of surprise, we know nothing of that,
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

With a new fashion of going to school to learn outlandish dances,
Balanced, rigid, and grave, and other prances, With a new governess who writes plays and romances,
Legendary tales, epigrams, and such idle fancies,
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

With a new muslin gown, never work'd on for more than a minute, With a wonder that we ever had the courage to begin it,
With a new purse declared very pretty by all who have seen it, Though perhaps when 'tis finished there is nothing to put in it,
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

With the best French rouge and pearl powder for the face,
With a little de mouton, poudre d'Artois, and poudre de grasse,
With new flashy gowns, and soufflé gauze to look like lace, Balloon hats, cork rumps, and cestuses to keep every thing in its place,
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

With new scribble scribble letters full of sentiment and stuff,
Of which read two lines and you've read enough,
My dearest creature, I have got the sweetest stuff,
Apropos! there is an old fashion now reviv'd—
"The Queen Elizabeth's ruff,"
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

With a new custom of staying up all night at quadrille,
And coming down stairs next day in dishabille—
No wonder the ladies now a days look so very ill,
And that they have fainting fits and hysterics whenever they will,
Like the ladies of modern times, &c.

"But, thank the stars for them, such as they are,
and we all may be very glad,
"To take what we can get, since no better's to be had,
"For the life of woman haters, tho' sensible, is sad,
"Nor is he to be envied who never went mad
After the ladies of modern times,

a reservoir of moisture, which is brought up to the roots of the plants, by the evaporation which the heat of the sun occasions. 3. By deep ploughing, also, the ground may be more effectually cleared of root weeds, of every description; in particular, it is the best mode of eradicating thistles. 4. By deep ploughing, animal and vegetable manures, which have such a tendency to rise to the surface, are properly covered. This cannot be done by shallow ploughing, in consequence of which, much of the value of such manure is lost. And 5. By deep ploughing, a heavier crop is raised, than can be got from a shallow furrow. An intelligent farmer, indeed, after pointing out that deep ploughing increases the staple of the soil, keeps the roots of the corn from being injured by wetness, and also enables the crop longer to resist drought, adds, "I have ever found deep ploughing attended with good crops, when ridges, shallow ploughed, in the same field, were but indifferent; which seems a decisive proof in favour of deep ploughing."

5. Manner of laying the Furrow-Slice. In several districts in England, it is usual to lay the furrow-slice quite flat, and this is particularly the case where there are no ridges; but in Northumberland, and in Scotland, a contrary system is adopted. It is founded on this idea, that as two of the principal objects in ploughing are, to expose as much surface as possible to the influence of the atmosphere, and to lay the land, so that the harrows may, in the most efficient manner, raise mould to cover the seed; these objects are most effectually accomplished by ploughing land of every description, with a furrow-slice about seven inches deep, and which, if about ten inches and a half broad, raises the furrow-slice, with a proper shoulder, forming the angle 45, the point which ought to be referred to, when determining between the merits of different specimens of ploughing. For that purpose, the depth of the furrow, should, in general, bear a due proportion to its breadth, that is, about two thirds, or as six inches deep is to nine broad. In the southern counties of England, they are partial to the idea, of smothering weeds by tillage. This cannot be effected, by placing the slices on an angle of 45, but by turning the furrow-slice completely over, for the purpose of burying the weeds, and converting them to vegetable mould.

6. Seasons for executing the Work. This must greatly depend upon the soil, and the state of the weather. In very dry light lands, it is advisable, that ploughing should be carried on in damp weather, or even in rain, particularly the last ploughing, and the sowing of the seed. On the other hand, soils, of so retentive a nature, as to hold water much more in quantity than is useful to vegetation, ought to be ploughed in a medium state, neither wet nor dry. When perfectly dry, they will not plough at all, being so hard and tenacious; and if ploughed when wet, the land is ruined by poaching, and plastering. This circumstance, renders the cultivation of clayey soils so extremely difficult.

All corn stubbles, (which are without clover or other seeds,) as soon after harvest as the other works of the farm can permit, should be ploughed as speedily as possible, and thus put into a state for receiving benefit from the winter frosts.
