FOR THE KINGSTON CHRONICLE.

Tot homines tal sententia.
The swarthy black takes Quashee by the muzzle, Deeming her "hautout" odoriferous; Which to fine gentlemen may be a puzzle, But, to a man of scents, 'tis plain enough, God knows.

[ter,
The man, who's married, e'en a twelvemonth after, Is glad to be awake at dead of night; By squall of new-born babe, or son or daughter, Expelled from "Cara Sposa's" couch outright.

All men affect at beauty's shrine to brighten; But youth and age fastidious are, and odd; And some call beauties things, such things, by G—d! As others think, from corn the crows would frighten.

Now, how the deuce can I, a farming man, Who lives secluded, in a savage world, Discover what it is that makes a charming one— Whether 'tis rouge, or false hair nicely curl'd, A bottom well attached, or bosom; Or 'tis, simply, what is called a woman? For such I have no love, Not I, by Jove!

But reader, as you fain would know, Why such, to me, are but so—so; And as 'tis time, Tho' I a rhyme Should to my choice address:— While I the Muse mine impertune; Her name, her family, and fortune, I leave both them and you to guess:— And thus, without ado or cour'e-y, Abrupt begin my little poesy.

"Thy nought but cold iron,
Thy form dull environ,
All hail! thou promoter of my rest:
I am warmed by thy charms,
When not clapp'd in thine arms,
Nor reclined is my head on thy breast.

Reswifling to some is a girl full of fire;
But from fire such as hers keep me free;
I ne'er could a passion so selfish admire,
For her heat warms herself and not me.

Of his fair, o'er the simper and sigh,
The poet with rhapsody pours;
But for my dearer's sigh, not a farthing care I,
I am overjoyed when she roars.

She burns not with envy, with Belles ne'er she clashes;
Nor belauds her face over with red;
And what is more strange still, she gives me her ashes
To preserve for her sake, e'er she's dead.

Surpassing the daughter of great Cato hollow,
Who in coals took a dose lissing hot;
A bushel at least, every day, will she swallow;
And the worse for it be, not a jot.

Tho' she lives with a bachelor, careless of marriage,
At ill-nature she feels not alarm;
For the ladies, most chaste and demure, in their carriage,
Are all pleased with her manners so warm.

Ah! when'er she the bucket, unhappily, kicks,
As a present to Pluto she goes;
I am sure she'll be pleased with the river of Styx;
And she'll warm his old Majesty's toes.

But as long as of life there remain but a spark,
And I feel in her frame any glow,
I will keep her aloft, nor to regions so dark,
"Till she's breathless and cold, shall she go.

Courteous reader, then when you sit warm by your stove;
Think kindly of her whom I praise;
And acknowledge at least, tho' no man r to love,
You perceive there is breath in my lays. T.
