The QUEEN'S LETTER to the KING
London, Aug. 4.

The London papers of Monday contain the Queen's letter to the King. It is a very long document, far too long for our limited space. It is a retrospect of her Majesty's life since her marriage to the present period. It concludes thus:

"On these grounds I protest against this species of trial. I demand a trial in a court where the jurors are taken impartially from amongst the people, and where the proceedings are open and fair. Such a trial I court, and to no other will I willingly submit. If your Majesty perforce in the present proceeding, I shall even in the House of Parliament, face my accusers; but I shall regard any decision they may make against me as not in the fullest degree reflecting on my honour, and I will not, except compelled by actual force, submit to any sentence which shall not be pronounced by a Court of Justice."

"I have now frankly laid before your Majesty a statement of my wrongs, and a declaration of my views and intentions. You have called upon me every flur to which the female character is liable. Instead of loving, honouring and cherishing me, agreeably to your solemn vow, you have pursued me with hatred and scorn, and with all the means of destruction. You wrested from me my child, and with her my only comfort and consolation. You sent me sorrowing through the world, and even in my sorrows pursued me with unrelenting persecution. Having left me nothing but my innocence, you would now, by a mockery of justice, deprive me even of the reputation of possessing that. The poisoned bowl and the poniard are means more manly than perjured witnesses and partial tribunals; and they are less cruel, inasmuch as life is less valuable than honour. If my life would have satisfied your Majesty, you should have had it on the sole condition of giving me a place in the same tomb with my child; but since you would send me dishonoured to the grave, I will resist the attempt with all the means that it shall please God to give me.

(Signed) CAROLINE R.

"Brandenburgh House, Aug. 7, 1820."
On Tuesday her Majesty under the recommendation of her advisers, wrote the above letter with her own hand to the King. It was despatched by one of her Majesty's messengers to his Majesty's cottage in Windsor Park, where his Majesty has been residing since the late reviews. The arrival of such a letter having been communicated to the King, he did not hesitate to decline receiving it through any other source than that by which communications are usually made to him, namely, through Lord Liverpool, as his Prime Minister. With this answer the messenger returned to Brandenburgh House the same night. The ensuing morning the letter was forwarded to the Earl of Liverpool, with a command from the Queen, that he should lay it before his Majesty at his earliest convenience. The Earl of Liverpool acknowledged the receipt of the letter, and intimated his intention, without loss of time, to comply with her Majesty's direction. Thus matters remained till Friday, when, no answer having been received, another letter was sent from her Majesty to Lord Liverpool, referring to that which she had directed to the King, and expressing surprise that she had received no official acknowledgement of its having been conveyed to the quarter for which it was intended. This letter was forwarded to Lord Liverpool, who wrote the same day, from Coombe Wood, that he had not received the King's commands to make any communication to her Majesty in consequence of her letter.

From the New York Evening Post, of September 30.

After our form was made up we received by the ship Magnet, in 34 days from Liverpool, London papers to the 22d, and Liverpool to the 24th of August, inclusive.

The trial of the Queen proceeded without any extraordinary occurrence until Monday the 21st, when after finishing his opening speech, the Attorney General introduced his first witness by the name of Theodore Majocchi. "On hearing his name called (says the Courier,) she turned round and screamed aloud, 'What!—Theodore!' and having darted from her seat, through the door of her apartment, followed after a short interval by Lady Ann Hamilton. This was about half past twelve o'clock. Her Majesty had not been seated above three minutes. The scream and exclamation of the Queen operated upon the feelings of the house with electric effect. A long pause ensued. Peers, Counsel and strangers looked as if they doubted the evidence of their eyes and ears, not a
