THE NEGRO'S LAMENT FOR MUNGO PARE.

1.
 WHERE the wild Joliba
 Rots his deep waters,
 Sate at their evening toil
 Africa's dark daughters,
 Where the thick Mangroves
 Broad shadows were flinging,
 Each o'er her lone loom
 Bent mournfully singing—
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

2.
 Through the deep forest
 Pierce lions are prowling:
 Mid thickets entangling
 Hyenas are howling;
 There should he wander,
 Where danger lurks ever,
 To his home, where the sun sets,
 Return shall he never.
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

3.
 "The hands of the Moor
 In his wrath do thou bind him?
 Oh! seal'd is his doom
 If the savage Moor find him,
 More fierce than hyenas,
 Through darkness advancing,
 Is the curse of the Moor,
 And his eyes' fiery glancing!
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

4.
 "A voice from the desert!
 My wilds do not hold him;
 Pale thirst doth not rack,
 Nor the sand-storm unfold him
 The death-gale pass'd by,
 And his breath fail'd to smother,
 Yet ne'er shall he wake
 To the voice of his mother!
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

5.
 "O loved of the Lotus
 Thy waters adorning,
 Pour, Joliba! pour
 Thy full streams to the morning!
 The Halcyon may fly
 To thy wave as her pillow,
 But woe to the white man,
 Who trusts in thy billow!
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

6.
 "He launch'd his light bark,
 Our fond warnings despising,
 And sail'd to the land
 Where the day-beams are rising.
 His wife from her bower
 May look forth in her sorrow,
 But he shall ne'er come
 To her hope of to-morrow!
 "Alas! for the white man! o'er deserts a ranger!
 No more shall we welcome the white bosom'd stanger!"

From the Boston Daily Advertiser of September 20.

WAR IN THE PERSIAN GULF.
 From various accounts which we find under different dates in Calcutta papers, we have made the following narrative of the British expedition against the Arabian pirates in the Persian Gulf. A British and East India Company's squadron sailed from Bombay under command of Major General Sir William Grant Keir, having on board two regiments of foot, one native regiment, and small detachments of other troops. They arrived at Kishma, their place of rendezvous in the Persian Gulf, about the middle of November last. On the 2d of December the expedition proceeded against Ras ul Khymah, where about 2000 of the pirates were assembled. They carried on an active siege against this place for six days. The Arab princes made a stout resistance, but finding themselves hard pressed, they on the night of the 9th evacuated the place, and retired to the interior, having lost during the siege 150 killed and 200 wounded. Eighteen or 20 men were taken by the British, and 15 large Dows and 100 smaller vessels were found in this harbour. On the 11th one of the most powerful of the Arab chiefs came in and surrendered himself.
 On the 18th, a detachment proceeded against the town of Rumps, and the fort of Zyah, about 12 miles N. E. from Ras ul Khymah. After a siege of three or four days, in which the Arabs suffered great loss, the town surrendered—398 men, with Hossein bin Ally at their head, marched out without their arms, and 400 women and children were found in the town.
 We find no further accounts of military operations, but the following paragraphs show that the war was brought to a close.

BOMBAY, Feb. 26, 1820.
 The Nautilus has arrived from the Persian Gulf with despatches, and a copy of a treaty with the pirate chiefs, who, it is said, have agreed to the terms dictated to them. It is expected that the troops, with the exception of the necessary garrison for the station to be retained in the gulf, will return to this port in the course of the next month, or in April at the latest.

BOMBAY, Feb. 24.
 The whole of the Arab pirate chiefs, we are informed, have come to our terms. Great commercial advantages, and protection from other tribes, are expected from this alliance.

BOMBAY, March 11.
 The first division of the transports from the gulf, with detachments of the 47th and 65th Regiments, returned to this harbor on Wednesday and Thursday. The remaining five transports may be expected here in 8 or 10 days. The 1st bat. of the 2d reg. &c. remain for the present to garrison Ras ul Khyma. Sir W. G. Keir has proceeded to Bushire, in the Liverpool, for the purpose of making some arrangement with the Persian government respecting our occupying some station on the Persian side of the Gulph, to keep in check the piratical spirit of the inhabitants of the shores of Arabia. Sir W. G. Keir is expected to return to Bombay in about six weeks.
