

POETRY.

THE COMPAGNA OF ROME.

From the second part of Rogers's Italy. We look, and where the river rolls Southward its shining labyrinth, in her strength

A city, girt with battlements and towers On seven small hills is rising. Round about

At rural work, the citizens are seen, None unemployed; the noblest of them all Binding their sheaves, or on their threshing floors

As though they had not conquered. Every where Some trace of valour or heroic virtue! Here is the sacred field of the Horatii.

There are the Quinarian Meadows. Here the hill How holy, where a generous people twice, Twice going forth, in terrible anger safe

Armed; and their wrongs redressed, at once gave way Helmet and shield, and sword and spear thrown down.

And every hand uplifted, every heart Pour out its thanks to heaven. Once again

We look; and lo, the sea is white with sails Innumerable, wafting to the shore Treasures untold; the vale, the proudest rears, A dream of glory; temples, palaces, Called up as by enchantment; aqueducts Among the groves and glades rolling along Rivers, on many an arch high over head; And in the centre, like a burning sun, The imperial city! They have now subdued

All nations. But where they who led them forth; Who, when at length released by victory, (Buckler and spear hung up—but not to rust)

Held poverty no evil, no reproach, Living on little with a cheerful mind, The Decii, the Fabricii? Where the spade And reaping hook, among their household things

Duly transmitted? In the hands of men Made captive: while the master and his guests, Reclining, quaff in gold, and roses swim,

Summer and winter, through the circling year, On their Falernian—in the hands of men Dragged into slavery with how many more

Spared but to die a public spectacle, In combat with each other, and required To fall with grace, with dignity—to sink, While life was gushing, and the plaudits ring

Faint, and yet fainter on their falling ear, As models for the sculptor. But their days, Their hours, are numbered. Hark, a yell, a shriek,

A barbarous dissonance, loud and yet louder That echoes from the mountains to these! And mark, beneath us, like a bursting cloud, The battle moving onward! Had they slain All, that the earth should from her womb bring forth

New nations to destroy them? From the depth Of forests, from what none had dared explore Regions of thrilling ice, as though an ice Engendered, multiplied, they pour along! Shaggy and huge! Host after host they come;

The Goth, the Vendal! and again the Goth Once more we look, and all is still as night, All desolate! Groves, temples, palaces, Swept from the sight; and nothing visible, Amid the sulphurous vapours that exhale As from a land accurst, save here and there An empty tomb, a fragment like the limb Of some dismembered giant. In the midst A city stands, her domes & turrets crown'd With many a cross: but they that issue forth,

Wander like strangers who had built among The mighty ruins, silent, spiritless, And on the road, where once we might have met

Cæsar and Cato, and men more than kings, We meet, none else, the pilgrim & the beggar.

SALATHIEL: A Story of the Present, the Past, and the Future.

CONCLUSION. "Here I pause.—I had undergone that portion of my career which was to be passed among my people, My life as a father, husband, citizen, was at an end. Thenceforth I was to be a solitary man. My fate had yet scarcely fallen upon me; but I was now to feel it in the disruption of every gentler tie that held me to life. I was to make my couch with the savage, the outcast, and the slave. I was to see the ruin of the mighty, and the overthrow of empires. Yet, in the tumult that changed the face of the world, I was still to live, and be unchanged. Every stern passion that disturbs our nature was to reign in successive tyranny over my soul. And fearfully was the decree fulfilled.

"In revenge for the fall of Jerusalem, I traversed the globe to seek out an enemy of Rome. I found in the northern snows a man of blood: I stirred up the soul of Alaric, and led him to the sack of Rome. In revenge for the insults heaped upon the Jew by the dotards and dastards of the city of Constantine, I sought out abatement of compedious ruin: I found him in the Arabian sands, and poured ambition into the soul of the enthusiast of Mecca. In revenge for the pollution of the ruins of the Temple, I roused the iron tribes of the west, and at the head of the crusaders expelled the Saracens. I fed full on revenge, and I felt the misery of revenge!

"A passion for the mysteries of nature seized me. I toiled with the alchemist; I wore away years in the perplexities of the schoolmen; and I felt the guilt and emptiness of unlawful knowledge!

"A passion for human fame seized me. I drew my sword in the Italian wars; I triumphed; was a monarch; and learned to curse the hour when I first dreamed of fame!

"A passion for gold seized me. I felt the gnawing of avarice—the last infirmity of the fallen mind. Wealth came to my wish, and to my torment. In the midst of royal treasures, I was poorer than the poorest. Days and nights of misery were the gift of avarice. I felt within me—the undying worm. In my passion, I longed for regions were the hand of man had never filled the mine. I found a bold Genoese, & led him to the discovery of a new world. With its metals I inundated the old; and to my own misery added the misery of two hemispheres!

"But the circle of the passions, a circle of fire, was not to surround my fated steps for ever. Calmer and nobler aspirations were to rise in my melancholy heart. I saw the birth of true science, true liberty, and true wisdom. I lived with Petrarch, among his glorious relics of the genius of Greece and Rome. I stood enraptured beside the easel of Angelo and Raphael. I conversed with the merchant kings of the Mediterranean. I stood at Mentz, beside the wonder-working machine that makes knowledge imperishable, and sends it with winged speed through the earth. At the pulpit of the mighty man of Wirttemberg, I knelt:—Israelite as I was, and am—I did involuntary homage to the mind of Luther!

"But I must close these thoughts, as wandering as the steps of my pilgrimage. I have more to tell—strange, magnificent, and sad.

"But I must await the impulse of my heart. Or, can the happy and the high-born, treading upon roses, have an ear for the story of the Exile, whose path has for a thousand years been in the brier and the thorn!"—Vol. iii., pp. 414—417.

This singular production which is so remarkable for the splendour of its diction as the solemn grandeur of its narrative, is said to be the work of the Rev. G. Croly; an author distinguished by a most successful employment of a style, which, when adopted by a writer of inferior ability, becomes a mere tissue of affectation and bombast. Mr. Croly's poetry has long been regarded as possessing a character perfectly original, but original only by the bright and concentrated glow of thought with which his genius has impressed every stanza. The attempt has been often made to astonish readers by a heaping together of all the wild and brilliant forms of nature, the richest pillars and gorgeous ornaments of palaces; but they were but gathered together; we saw only the fragments of an intended pile; there was no magician, with his mysterious power, clothing them with a bright and fearful mantle of flame, and we have smiled at such a violation of truth and nature. But the author of "Salathiel" has made us admire—what none, perhaps, but himself, could have rendered fit for admiration—a style, which when closely examined, is certainly very contrary to the purity and ease of every other writer of celebrity, and a colouring given to every object he presents, which scarcely ever permits us to look at nature otherwise than under the red glare of a torrid sun or an angry thunder-cloud; yet, such is the power of the writer, that we have laid down "Salathiel," which is more strongly imbued with these peculiarities of his style than any of his former works, with the feeling that it is one of the most splendid productions among works of fiction that the age has brought forth.

The ships composing this line are all of the first class, copper-fastened and coppered, of about 400 tons burthen, and as fast sailors as any packets in the trade. To Irish Emigrants this line is especially recommended, on account of the easy and frequent communication between the Irish ports and Liverpool, by means of steam-boats and smacks, and to all it will extend the peculiar advantage of a connexion with respectable companies upon the Hudson River and the New York canals, by which is secured the readiest and cheapest conveyance to either of the Canadian Provinces.
