By Patrick Prazer Tytler, Esq. The chilling air and mouning breeze Strip of their vellow leaves the trees: The birds have ceased their summer song And flowers are none, and nights are long O'er the still lake and mountain streams The icy frostwork shoots, and gleams; And howling Winter, dark and drear, Claims the sad relic of the year. Now were I like a brain-sick fool, Of every passing cloud the tool, I ought to feel congenial gloom, And fill the page with thoughts of doom; Tell weeping fancy how she weaves Her song anid the falling leaves; And moralize with leaden look, On fided flowers and frozen brook. But, sooth to say, my present mood Despises sentimental food; And fancied griefs and mimic tears, And idle sympethetic fears, Are banished, and forgotten quite, When she, my heart of heart's delight ! My only love, my beauteous bride, Sits smiling sweetly at my side, And the bright wall and blazing hearth Warm and attune the mind to mirth. Yos, dearest! I am blest indeed, When love like yours hath been my meed: And this poor heart must, 'neath the chill And icy hand of death, grow still, Ere it can cease to give to thee A love as strong as thine to me. In 1781, when the Combined Armies reached Williamsburg, preparatory to the siege of York Town, the General in Chief accompanied by the Marquis de Lafavette, General Rochambeau, Knox and others, repaired on board the Ville de Paris, the flag ship of the Count de Grasse, to consult on those combined operations which Esq. of Bath, who is authorised to setwere speedily to take place. The Admi- tle all accounts relating to the said esral, in his great enthusiasm for the Ameri- 1-tocan stero, no sooner beheld the object of his admiration upon the Quarter deck of the Ville de Paris, then he hugged him in York, 1st, Oct. 1828. his rens, rapturously exclaiming—my dear little General, my dear little General. The person of De Grasse was gigantic, but the term petit, when applied to the noble and commanding from Washington, produced an effect upon the risible muscles of all present, which took some time to subside. The foreign officers made great efforts to Store Street. compose their visages within the bounds of true politeness, while our own jolly Knox shook his fat sides in boundless glee. The fate of De Grasse and the Ville de Paris is well known to history. That magnificent ship was a present from the City of Pris to the French King. She rated Ilde tus and 1300 men. On her arrival in the s'hexapeake, it is said that on her quarter deck flowers and tropical plants were interspersed amid the engines of Bay, where schooners can take it in .war while her sides, covered with a bright Letters, with proper references, addresvarnish, gave to this superb vessel a most | sed to him, at Ancaster, will be duly atbrill ant and imposing appearance. the transcrable 12th of April, De Grasse, December 22d, 1827. desirted by some of his captains, his own ship totally dismasted a large proportion of of his officers and crew killed or wounded, nobly maintained the unequal contest, and refused to yield to any ship carrying less than an admiral's flag; at length the Barfluer 9: Sir Samuel Hood, ranging alongside the colours of France were lowered on the peop of as bravely defended a vessel as bath adorned the annals of the French marine, either before or since the 12th of April, 1782. ACKETS, for S eerage Passengers only, to sail on the 5th and 20th of every month, - from Liverpool for New York.

The ships composing this line are all of the first class, copper-fastened and coppered, of about 400 tons burthen, and as fast sailors as any packets in the trade. They have super or accommodations, being very lofty between decks; are commanded by experienced masters, whose best endeavours will be to promote the comfort of passengers, and the appointed days of sailing will be strictly adhered to.

The facility and convenience of this establishment to persons residing at a expense too often attending the uncertain and protracted departure of a transient vessel, will, it is hoped, be duly appreciated, and command such a preference and support, as will, ensure its continuance and success. To Irish Emigrants this line is especially recommended, on account of the easy and frequent communication Pork Merchants can have their Lard between the Irish ports and Liverpool, and to all it will extend the peculiar advantage of a connex on with respectable companies upon the Hudson River and the New York canals, by which is secured the readiest and cheapest conveyance to either of the Canadian Provinces. and that Mr. George Munro, of York, friends can procure them a safe and expeditious passage, by applying to John Macaulay, Esq. Kingston, William Gamble, Esq. York, or James Morris, Esq. Brockville, Upper Canada.
