

A FEMALE PORTRAIT OF BEAUTY.

AN EXTRACT.

"Hermione, the maid was named, whose form, rounded and full, display'd the sanctuary of Love; for Love might well have chosen here, so fair a shrine, to make his long abode. Of ivory and alabaster blent, Her limbs were form'd in so exact a mould, That their transparent forms might almost seem To melt in air, or float impalpable, Like the bright moon-beams in the quiet lake, Nor, though she thus boatous, ethereal, pure, sweetest breath of early flowers, not less he glow'd a woman to the touch, that might The type of all her sex have been. Her breast An altar was, in which did burn a lamp Exhaustless; whose bright light shed from her eyes Such rays of tenderness, that e'en might tame The lion in his rage, and bid him quit His prey, and crouch beneath her feet (for such, As olden legends sing, is Beauty's power!); Her voice the silver bells would shame! Like Terai's waterfall did dazzling shine: Nor fairer form than her's hath Fancy bright: E'er wove, or Grecian chisel ever form'd, In marble breathing with ideal grace. Oh, woman! arm'd with love's resistless power, How oft does terror flash from thy full eye, And thunder hang upon thy lip! Thy words, Like lightning, whither the proud breast of man. With all the horrors of the tempest fraught; And then one sunny smile of thy soft eye Revives our trembling heart; the shudd'ring chill Of thy disdain, like clouds, is chased away;— Disdain, that fiercer is than lion's roar, More stern than tyrant's frown, which quite o'ercomes Our courage high (shame and confusion then, Like mists, our sick'ning atmosphere becomes). O'er man, proud man, such is thy wond'rous might, That men for thee, do wealth, and fame, and power, Abandon; the lead of mankind have left Submissive, to be led by thee. The queen Of willing arts thou reign'st! Thy potent spells Who can withstand, enchantress? who resist The subtle fascination of thine eyes, Or the sweet poison that, like iren's notes Drops from thy tongue, and falling on the ear, Can e'en to madness turn the brain of him That's deep imbued with philosophic lore?"

From the London Literary Gazette. Whitehall, or, the Days of George IV. 12mo pp. 330. London, 1827. W. Marsh. Concluded.

It would be endless, however, to give specimens of the whimsical perversions of history and costume continually introduced; and we therefore turn to the story.

Mr. Smithers, a mulatto (son of a missionary, executed by the barbarous orders of the British government, and a sable lady, who, to use his own grandiloquent expressions, "prepared his culinary fare by day, and shared his couch by night;" Africa claimed her birth, and the name by which she was known was Jock)—Mr. Smithers had come to England to claim justice on the murderers of his father. As he was on the top of a Dover couch, coming over Westminster Bridge from the West Indies, on his way to Holmes's Hotel, he makes an indelible impression on the heart of Miss Hawkins, who faints in his arms. Our hero is no less smitten, but on awaking in the morning determines to part from his love to his duty. Having procured a guide, he and his faithful Caesar set out for the friend of the human race, Zebediah Macfarlane; when, having stopped outside the Admiralty to admire the splendid building of that gorgeous pile, they are observed by Commodore Parry, of the Horse Marines, who, knowing that the West Indies is in uproar, thinks it his duty to report them to the Lord High Admiral.

This joke, we think, cannot fail to be successful. The names, sprinkled about as they are with unsparing hand, are generally, indeed in all cases but one or two, handled with the utmost good humour. We must, however, say, that it were as well if those two or three were totally eradicated—the humour of the book would be just as good, and the nature better. The style, as our readers must have perceived, is easy and flowing; but from several inaccuracies in language, and as many in arrangement—(Jeremy Bentham, for instance, is beheaded in p. 92, and in p. 185 he is hired by the Duke of Wellington to poison Romero Alpuerte)—we suspect it was written with infinite haste. The writer can do better things; and indeed what he has done in this instance can only be gathered from a perusal of his book. The touches are so slight and so innumerable, that it is quite impossible to detach them for a Review that will afford an idea of the character of the performance. Sometimes we are provoked at its absurdities, and the next moment we laugh heartily at the ludicrous and grotesque effect of a Parthian arrow glancing off a well-known personage: for the hits are generally (as we have said) playful rather than mischievous; and even the wounded, we think, must be amused by their own tickling hurts. The name of the author is not given: our guess is, that he is well known as one of the most able and clever writers who figure in the periodical literature of the day, and that he adds three very learned letters (such as LL. D.) to his formal signature.

We see he announces a quiz on the fashionable novels, to be called Park Lane, or the Annals of Alvanley. This is tender ground; and we fear that his pen is too slashing to get through it with the requisite delicacy. Nous verrons. At all events, the field offers fairly for a like union of broad caricature and drollery as that which is the prominent quality of Whitehall.
