From the London Literary Gazzites. Gresse, a very fat painter, and friend of Captain Grose, was appointed to teach some of the royal family. " Gresse, on hie first introduction as a teacher at the royal palaces, had been told by Muller, page to the thea young prince Edward, that the etiquette was, if by accident he met the king, or any member of the reyal family, within the palace, to stand respectfully still-I t them pass, and take no notice, unless those great personages condescended to notice him. It happened, that during his many professional visits at Buckingham House, at Kew, and at Windsor, during the first two years' attendance, he had never by any chance met the king. One day, however, whilst waiting to attend the queen, and amusing himself in looking at the painted ceiling in the great audience chamber, a door suddenly opened, and by a side glance he perceived himself in the royal presence .-It was no less a personage than his majesty king George the Third, who entered alone. Struck, no doubt, with the extraordinary bulk and general contour of the figure of the artist, for he stood with his hands behind him, grasping his cocked hat and his legs steaddling wide, with his head thrown book, the king advanced to the middle of the room, and eyed him with apparent surprise, Gresse, remembering the point of etiquette, dropped his head to its natural position, and stood stockstill. After his majesty had taken this survey, he walked round, whilst Gresse, wishing a trap-door to open under his own feet, remained, nothing short of waxen figure beneath a tropical sun. At length the king, unconscious, we may reasonable suppose, of the misery of the sensitive artist, walked to some distance, and turning round took a view of him right in front. Gresse, determined to show the king that he really was not a statue, regardless of further etiquette, made to the severeign a most profound how, which the king understanding, as it is supposed, he immediately retired.

" Gresse, after this accidental first interview with our last sovereign, as have before observed, became a great favourite with his mijesty; so much so, indeed, that the king condescended to visit his house, which he built at Cookham, and in which he resided occasionally during the summer season. As this house, which was dubbed Gresse's folly, had neither external elegance nor much internal beauty to boust however, it is likely that the king was excited by that playful humour in which he occasionally indulged, to view it as a cur osity, being the residence of so great a min. I have hourd Grasse relate, with much delight, the conversation which happened at this royal visit. His majesty went into every apartment, noticed the contrivances of the kitchen, commented on his pictures, and then New Times once contained an account buildings. You have chosen too low a site though,' observed his majesty, Take care, Misier Gresse, or you will be carried off in a winter flood : which prognostic, by the way, had nearly occurred within a year after. On going up a staircase, constructed with a too sudden turn, which led to the huge man's dormitory, the king whispered to one of the attendants, ' I wonder how Gresse climbs up this narrow flight; but a greater wonder will be, how they there is no flexibility in a coffin-hey

don. He prided himself on this cirthe Third. Indeed, his Majesty, in you and I were born Britons ; that is at Kerby and Hatt's store, Burlington pil of his estimable colleague, Cigriani; tended to. indeed he lived with this painter many | December 22d, 1827. years, and was a very close imitator of other masters; so many, indeed, that unfortunately differed with the engraver, who, Italian-like, wie hasty, and hold your tongue; you have copy so by the month or week. many mustare, you have not left no style at all. "Gainsborough, as is sufficiently known, was an enthusiastic admirer of music; and though certainly no musician, yet his love for sweet sounds was such, that he had tried his native skill upon almost every instrument. He was too capricious to sit to study any one methodically, though having a nice ear, he could perform an air on the fiddle, the guitar, the harpsicherd, or the flute. Under Fischer, his son-in-law, he did take a few lessons upon the hau:boy, or clarionet, I forget which; but made nothing of it. He, however, could assistant to a certain degree on a keyed instrument, and used frequently to chant any rodomentade that was uppermost, accompanying himself with the chords on my mother's pianoforte. Bach, who had a true German share of dry humour, used to sit and endure his miserable attempts, and, laughing in his shere, excisin, 'Brave : Wh ist Gains- t borough, not at all abashed at his irony, would proceed, labouring hard at any particular key, be it major or be it manor, and drolly exclaim, ' Now for Purcell's chant; now a specimen of old Bird.' 'Dat is debilish fine,' cried Each. 'Now for a touch of Kent, and old Heary Liwes,' added Cainsborough; when Bach, his patience worn out, would cry, ' Now dat is too pad; dere is no law, by goles! why the gompany is to listen to your murder of all these ancient gombosers;' when, getting up from his seat, he would run his finger rattling along all the keys, and, pushing the painter from his seat, would sit himself in his place, and flourish voluntaries as though he was inspired. Once Buch called upon him in Pall-Mall, and going straight to his paintingroom, he found him facging hard at the bassoon, an instrument that requires the wind of a forge-bellows to fill. Gainsborough's cheeks were puffed, and his face was round and red as the harvest moon. Bach stood astounded. 'Pote it away, man, pote it away; do you want to burst yourself like the frog in the fable ! De defil! it is only fit for the lungs of a country blackschmidt.' Nay, now!' exclaimed Gainsbo:ough; it is the richest bass in the world. Now do listen again.' 'Listen,' added at the market price. Bach, 'mine friendt, I did listen at your door in the pressure, and py and the powers above, as I hole to be saved, it is just for all the world as the veri-D--- a it !' exclumed Gainsborough, than an adder. Come, then, (taking the Tartan Plaid, Green Baize, Apren Check, clarionet)'--- Baw, Baw!' exclaimed Irish hait Hose; with many articles suitathe musician, 'vorse and vorse; no !! le to the present season, and at very low more of your canarding, 'tis as a duck ; Frices and very liberal credit. by Gar! 'tis vorse as a goose!' Mr. Jackson, of Exeter, the composer, so celebrated for his canzonets, must not be forgotten, as another exception to this observation, however. This disinguished musician was almost as fond shop adjoining Mr. J. G. Parker's of painting as Gainsborough was of music; and, as I have heard, was no mean performer with the pallet and pencils," Primitive Methodist Preacher .- A ranting preacher at le-Moors lately addressed his auditors in this highly figurative strain :--- Ah! I dare say you'd all woned, viz : pay to see a boxing match between Randall and Martin, yet you don't like to pay to see a boxing match between me and Belzebub. Oh! my friends many a hard knock, and many a cross buttock have I given the black bruiser for your sake! Pull, do pull off these gay garments of Munmon; strike the Devil a strait blow, and darken his spiritual daylights. At him manfully, send him at once into Chancery. I'll be your bottle-holder; I ask nothing but the money, which I hope you will not forget before you go !"--- Stockport Adrertiser.

Typographical Errors .--- The errors made by compositors are sometimes of a fashionable party at which one of the most distinguished persons was " the Duke of Pork!" Another paper lately furnished its readers with a long report of proceedings in the " Court of Common Fleas!' and the Morning Chronicle of last Tuesday contained an account of an "attrocious bobbery!" -- Lincoln Herald.
