

"Patient yourself, Madam, and pardon me." SHAKESPEARE.

Now, doubtless, every romance-reading person, into whose hands this book may fall, will conclude, and determine, and feel perfectly convinced in their own minds, that the scream, mentioned in the last chapter, announces no less important a being than the heroine of the tale, and will be very much surprised, as well as disappointed, to hear that when the traveller rode through the open gate into the little garden attached to the cottage, he perceived a group, which certainly did not derive any interest it might possess from the graces of youth and beauty. It consisted simply of an old woman, of the poorest class, striving, with weak hands, to stay a stout rosy youth, of mean countenance, but good apparel, from repeating a buffet he had bestowed upon the third person of the group, a venerable old man, who seemed little calculated to resist his violence. Angry words were evidently still passing on both parts, and before the traveller could hear to what they referred, the youth passed the woman, and struck the old man a second blow, which levelled him with the ground.

If one might judge from that traveller's appearance, he had seen many a sight of danger and of horror; but there was something in the view of the old man's white hair, mingling with the mould of the earth, that blanched his cheek, and made his blood run cold. In a moment he was off his horse, and by the young man's side. "How now, Sir villain!" cried he, "art thou mad, to strike thy father?" "He's no father of mine," replied the sturdy youth, turning away his head with a sort of dogged feeling of shame. He's no father of mine—I'm better come."

"I have heard something of the matter, but I would fain understand it more particularly," said the stranger. "I had learned that the sequestered estates had been restored, and the fines remitted, since this young King was upon the throne."

"Ay, truly, Sir, the main part of them," answered the old man; "but there were some men who, being in the Court's displeasure, were not likely to have justice done them. Such a one was my good Lord and master, who they say had been so hard to declare, that he held Perkin Warbeck's title as good as King Harry the Seventh's. So when they proved the penal statutes against him, as they called it, instead of calling for a fine, which every peasant on his land would have brought his mite to pay, they took the whole estate, and left him a beggar in his age. But that was not the worst, for doubtless the whole would have been given back again when the young King did justice on Empson and Dudley; but as this sequestration was a malice, and not an avarice like the rest, instead of transferring the estate to the King's own hand, they gave it to one Sir Payan Wilton, who, if ever a gallow was made higher than Haman's, would well grace it. This man has many a friend at the Court, gained, they say, by foul means; and though much stir was made some eight years ago, by the Lord Stafford and the good Duke of Buckingham, to have the Old Lord's estates given back again, Sir Payan was strong enough in abettors to outstand them all, and then—but I hear horse's feet. 'Tis surely Sir Payan sent to hound me out even from here."

The traveller gazed at him for a moment, as if in astonishment at his daring; then, with a motion as quick as light, laid one hand upon the yeoman's collar, the other upon the thick band of his kersey slop breeches, raised him from the ground, and giving him one swing back, to allow his arms their full sweep, he pitched him at once over the low wall of the garden into the heath bushes beyond.

Without affording a look to his prostrate adversary, the stranger proceeded to assist the old man in rising, and, amid the blessings of the good dame, conveyed him into the cottage. He then returned to the little garden, lest his horse should commit any ravages upon the scanty provision of the old couple, (for he was, it seems, too good a soldier even to allow his horse to live by plunder), and while tying him to the gate-post, his eye naturally turned to the bushes into which he had thrown his opponent.

The young man had just risen on his feet, and in unutterable rage was stamping furiously on the ground, without however daring to re-enter the precincts from which he had been so unceremoniously expelled. The stranger contented himself with observing that he was not much hurt; and after letting his eye dwell for a moment on the cogizance of a serpent twisted round a crane, which was embroidered on the yeoman's coat, he again entered the cottage, while the other proceeded slowly over the common, every now and then turning round to shake his clenched fist towards the garden, in the last struggles of impotent passion.

"Well, good father, how fares it with thee?" demanded the traveller, approaching the old man. "I fear that young villain has hurt thee." "Nay, Sir, nay," replied the other. "Not so; in faith he did not strike hard: an old man's limbs are soon overthrown. Ah! well I remember the day when I would have whacked a score of them. But I'm broken now.—Kate, give his worship the settle. If our boy had seen him lift his hand against his father, 'faith he'd have broken his pate.' Though your worship soon convinced him—God's blessing upon your head for it."

The stranger silently sat himself down in the settle, which the old woman placed for him with a thousand thanks and gratulations, and suffered them to proceed undisturbed with all the garrulosity of age, while his own thoughts seemed, from some unapparent cause, to have wandered far upon a different track. Whether, that the swift wings of memory had retraced in a moment a space that, in the dull march of time, had occupied many a long year, or that the lightning speed of hope had already borne him to a goal, which was still far beyond probability's short view, matters little. Most likely it was one or the other; for the present is but a point to which but little thought appertains, while the mind hovers backwards and forwards between the past and the future, expending the store of its regrets upon the one, and wasting all its wishes on the other.—He awoke with a sigh. "But tell me," said he to the old man, "what was the cause of all this?"

"Why, Heaven bless your worship," replied the cottager, who had been talking all the time, "I have just been telling you."

"Nay, but I mean why you came to live here?" said the traveller, "for this is but a poor place," and he glanced his eye over the interior of the cottage, which was wretched enough. Its floor formed of hardened clay—its small lattice windows boasting no glass in the wicker frames of which they were composed, but showing in its place some thin plates of horn (common enough in the meaner cottages of those times), admitting but a dull and miserable light to the interior—its bare walls of lath, through the crevices of which appeared the mud that had been plastered on the outside—all gave an air of poverty and discomfort difficult to find in the poorest English cottage of to-day. "I think you said that you had been in better circumstances?" continued the traveller.

"I did not say so, your Worship," replied the old man, "but it was easy to guess; yet, for twelve long years, have I known little but misery. I was then gate-keeper to my good Lord Fitzbernard, at Chilham Castle, here hard by—your Worship knows it, doubtless? Oh! 'twas a fair place in those days, for my Lord kept great state, and never a day but what we had the tilt-yard full of gallants, who would hear away the ring from the best in the land. My old Lord could handle a lance well, too, though he waxed aged; but 'twas my young Lord Osborne that was the darling of our hearts. Poor youth! he was not then fourteen, yet so strong, he'd break a lance, and bide a buffet with the best. He's over the seas now, alas! and they say obliged to win his foot at the sword's point."

"Nay, how so?" asked the traveller. "If he were heir of Chilham Castle, how is it he fares so hardly, this Lord Osborne?" "We called him still Lord Osborne," answered the old woman, "for I was his nurse when he was young, and his christened name was Osborne. But his title was Lord Darnley, by those who called him properly. God bless him for ever! Now Richard, tell his honour how all the misfortunes happened."

"'Twill but tire his honour," said the old man. "In his young day he must have heard how Empson and Dudley, the two blackest traitors that ever England had, went through all the country, picking holes in every honest man's coat, and sequestering their estates, as 'twas then called. Lord bless thee, Kate! his Worship knows it all."

"I have heard something of the matter, but I would fain understand it more particularly," said the stranger. "I had learned that the sequestered estates had been restored, and the fines remitted, since this young King was upon the throne."

SALT RHEUM.—This inveterate disease, which has long baffled the art of the most experienced physicians, has, at length, found a sovereign remedy in Dr. La Grange's genuine ointment. Few cutaneous diseases are met with more reluctance by the physician, & none in which he is so universally unsuccessful. This ointment has stood the test of experience, and justly obtained an unparalleled celebrity. It immediately removes the scabs, gives a healthy action to the vessels of the skin, and its original colour and smoothness. Numerous recommendations might be obtained of its superior efficacy, but the proprietor chose that a fair trial should be its only commentator. It has in three or four weeks cured cases of fifteen and twenty years' standing, that had resisted the power of every remedy that was tried. It not only at once gives immediate relief in Salt Rheum, but cures Tinea Capitis, commonly called Scald Head, and all scaly eruptions peculiar to unhealthy children. There is nothing of a mercurial nature contained in it, and it may be used on infants or others under any circumstances whatever. PRICE One Dollar per BOTTLE. For sale by Wm. Binley, Kingston, John Musson, Quebec, and George Bent Montreal, Sole Agent for the Canadas. Kingston, 11th July, 1828. The Board of Education for the Johnstown District give notice.

The Editors of such papers as have been in the habit of inserting the Company's advertisements, will please publish the above notice for three months. Canada Company's Office, York, Oct. 1829.
