

FROM THE IRISH SPEAR.
BOAT SONG.
When over the waters we gently glide,
Merrily, merrily, row,
Let love be our beacon, and song be our guide,
Merrily, merrily, row.
What is it that all the bright planets above us
Should never illumine the skies?
They may sleep in their watch if the beauties
That love us
Put brighter our path with their eyes.
Then when o'er the waters we gently glide,
Merrily, merrily, row,
Let love be our beacon and song be our guide,
Merrily, merrily, row.
While others are wasting the night in sleep,
Merrily, merrily, row,
We steal her soft breezes and sail o'er the deep,
Merrily, merrily, row.
And while to their senses flat dreams are revealing,
Their forms unsubstantial as air,
We wander like bees thro' the gardens of feelings,
And gather the honey that's there.
So when o'er the waters we gently glide,
Merrily, merrily, row,
Let love be our beacon, and song be our guide,
Merrily, merrily, row.
OSCAR.

NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.
"WHEN Buonaparte was paying his court to Madame de Beauharnais," says de Bourrienne, "neither of them kept a carriage, and he, being passionately in love, and a most assiduous suitor, escorted his intended about the town, and especially on her visits to her agent. They went one day together to the office of the notary Raguideau, who, by-the-by, was one of the smallest men I ever seen. Madame de Beauharnais, who placed great confidence in Raguideau, had come to him that day expressly for the purpose of communicating her intention of accepting the hand of the young general of artillery, the protegee of Barras. Josephine was accordingly closeted along with the notary, while Buonaparte walked in the outer office, occupied by the clerks. The door of Raguideau's cabinet, however, not being shut close, the general overheard the lawyer dissuading Madame Beauharnais from the marriage she was about to contract. 'You are very imprudent,' said the notary; 'you may have to repent this step as long as you live; it is madness to go and marry a man who has nothing but his sword to depend on.' 'Bonaparte,' said Josephine, when she told me these prior circumstances, 'had never alluded to this, and I had no idea that he heard what Raguideau had said. Imagine my astonishment, then, Bourrienne, when on the day of the coronation, as soon as he had put on the Imperial robes, he said, 'Go and find Raguideau, and bring him here immediately.' Raguideau soon made his appearance, and the Emperor said to him, 'Well, and have I nothing now but my sword to depend on?' Eight years had elapsed since the scene at the office of the notary; and Buonaparte, although he had borne in mind the discourse of M. Raguideau, had never mentioned that he was privy to it to a single soul, not even to De Bourrienne at the time when he was in the habit of making his secretary the confidant and depository of all his projects and secrets."—De Bourrienne's Memoirs.

JOSEPH BUONAPARTE.
THIS ex-monarch, who now leads a philosophical life on the banks of the Delaware, not far from Bordentown, was lately visited by Sir R. Kerr Porter, on his way from South America, by the United States, to Europe. The ci-devant king received with great hospitality the English traveller, who found him living in a commodious, and even splendid dwelling-house, constructed out of a large suite of stables, which had formerly been appended to a magnificent mansion, represented as quite a palace, which had been burnt down a short time before. Many fine pictures, and other valuable property, were consumed; but enough remained, saved from the fire, to furnish the present residence in a noble manner with some of the best works of Spanish and Flemish masters.

One of the saloons is particularly dedicated to sculpture portraits of the Buonaparte family; and Sir R. K. Porter, in speaking of the collection, describes the bust of Charles Buonaparte, the father of the family, as the most impressive of them all, from the striking beauty and character of countenance: it strongly resembles that of the celebrated Antinous. Joseph Bonapart (who has assumed the title of Count Surville) in showing these things, did it with unaffected candour of comment on the extraordinary destinies of the living or dead originals of these marble portraits; and Sir Robert remarks, that the same manly sincerity and good sense prevailed in his occasional observations on his own past and present manner of life.

He has a large domain round his house purchased by him; and he spends vast sums of money in promoting cultivation of all sorts, agriculture, and planting to a great extent every description of tree, even from foreign countries that can be raised in the climate. He has redeemed thousands of acres from the waste; erecting villages, and encouraging artificers, and other persons of useful talents, to inhabit them. He is universally respected; and must be, what he seems, a much happier man in his present expatriated home, the benefactor of all around him, than he could possibly have been when seated on a contested throne, however brilliant. He is fond of literary pursuits, and having read all that has been published in the shape of memoirs relating to his brother Napoleon, he devotes his leisure hours to writing a commentary on the subject, wherein, with the impartiality of strict justice between the late Emperor of France and historiographers, he means to set the true statements on the one side, and the false ones on the other, and to furnish posterity with, he trusts, a really fair account of that marvellous man. This, he says, he owes alike to the memory of his brother, and to the verity of his history. Whenever such a work is given to the world, it will certainly be worthy of attention, and, as it will probably come out while many witnesses of the times it tells of, still exist, its accuracy must be subject to the same ordeal by which he tries his contemporary biographers; and the free voice of the public, weighing all the evidence, will be the ultimate pronouncing judge of the real character of the deceased Napoleon.—Foreign Paper.

SALT RHEUM.—This inveterate disease, which has long baffled the art of the most experienced physicians, has, at length, found a sovereign remedy in Dr. La Grange's genuine ointment. Few cutaneous diseases are met with more reluctance by the physician, & none in which he is so universally unsuccessful. This ointment has stood the test of experience, and justly obtained an unparalleled celebrity. It immediately removes the scabs, gives a healthy action to the vessels of the skin, and its original colour and smoothness. Numerous recommendations might be obtained of its superior efficacy, but the proprietor chose that a fair trial should be its only commutator. It has in three or four weeks cured cases of fifteen and twenty years' standing, that had resisted the power of every remedy that was tried. It not only at once gives immediate relief in Salt Rheum, but cures Tinea Capitis, commonly called Scald Head, and all scabby eruptions peculiar to unhealthy children.

There is nothing of a mercurial nature contained in it, and it may be used on infants or others under any circumstances whatever.
