practice of each. That too much reserve

these houses we heard the following little

VOL. 12.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1830.

NO. 12.

LITERATURE.

ORIGINAL.

For the Chronicle.

TO ARINA.

Soft as the shades that usher in the day; Pure as the pendant dew-drop on the spray; Lovely as light, when slowly pass away The clouds that veil'd the moonbeam's silver ray. Grateful as kindness when dull griefs annoy, And sweet as Hope when fears each thought Welcome as love combin'd with constancy, Such is Arina's rosy smile to me.

Beauty can claim the tribute of a song, And admiration pleas'd its notes prolong; Beauty from eloquence commands applause, And sighs of Hope from aching bosoms draws; Beauty the Poet's pen can touch with fire, And songs of love, and lays of bliss inspire; When brightly she appears at break of day, And streaks the fields of light with colours gay So she appears when Cynthia crowns the night And sheds " from azure skiis her silver light;" But these must yield in beauty and in grace The Palm to young Arina's heav'nly face.

> For the Chronicle. ON A VIOLET.

Its fragrance flinging o'er the gale, Lo! where you flow'ret blooms unseen; The pride and boast of all the vale, Though hidden in its bow'r of green.

That scented flow'r, though bright its bloom, And shelter'd be its Sylvan bed; Shall feel too soon the winter's clory.

THE REBELLION IN SCOTLAND, 1745. (Continued.)

THESE characters, these changes and these turns of elevated sentiment are very astonishing. It is impossible to remark without respect and admiration, the noble daring and enthusiastic generosity of those devoted followers of the Youthful Prince, who came to wrest the sceptre from the grasp of the House of Brunswick. Those brave warriors paused not to cast one look upon the gigantic force opposed to them .land Kilt and Spear, with the formidable Lance and Bayonet of England, with her Artillery at her feet, and her Fleet in the when at every step, they incurred Treason and Death. They put no question to their Chief, but "was it his will?" none to the stance of magnanimity and elevation of sentiment. From this fact, we may learn an important lesson; videlicet, the necessity of spreading political knowledge among the people! for want of this, were those brave men doomed to perish! and the benefits of the Revolution to be endangered! and by whom was this two fold injury to be inflicted? by the noblest race of men, subject to the British Crown.

Counties of England, the danger might have been fatal to the Constitution! Had the northern Counties been as generous and brave, as they were mistaken in princessful, the Brunswick Family would have bees chased from the Throne, and the Pretender.

from their notions of the indefeasible noin the ballad of the day.

His right are the hills, his right are the valleys, Where the wild bird finds shelter, but he can find none.

This was the cause, which they resolved to support, however it might be deserted by the time-serving sycophants of the Lowlands and the South. It is impossible to consider such feelings and sentiments, without admiration; it is right that we should meditate upon them, that we may ments and generous feelings are not enough: they are lights from Heaven, but ration is to be found in the facts now under consideration.

What was the attempt of these generous, noble, and brave men ?-To destroy the liberty of a free people!

For whom did they contend?-For the I have tasted each varied pleasure, very Representative of Tyranny!

What was their ultimate object?-Te overthrow the happy constitution of Eng-

It pleased the beneficent, and all-ruling Providence, that their cause should not succeed: they lay slaughtered upon the Plains of Culloden-they were hunted down by their conquerors, in their native glens; they perished! and the cause perished with them! So perish the re. I weep for the ties that bound me membrance of their faults!

At this point, it is painful to note, the want of perspective wisdom, in the English Cabinet. The only step taken, was an order to disarm the Highlanders. To seize their arms, and to leave their hearts to be seized by others! and, hence, what was to be expected, did happen; the well disposed gave up their arms, and the evil part concealed them!

who deserves a better reputation than he fields Bay. It was between eight and nine face of a putrifying corpse. In this float- To female circles there requires par usage sion; and if this cure be, as La Rochefouhas obtained; but to whom posterity may in the morning. The laud wind had died and should, pay a just though tardy compensation.) advised, that a Highland army it in the North. Before concluding this paper, we must take once more a general view of this enterprise, and contrast the Highlanders with the People of England. Gibbon ?-- That Charles and his followers marched into the heart of the kingdom, without being either joined by their friends or opposed by their enemies. From what could this arise ?--- From national apathy! We cannot think it pusillanimity. It will be said, that they were not prepared; that they were not accustomed to the use of arms. Without hesitating to contrast the High- But what need was there of arms? Why did not the nation rise as one man and beat back the insolent invader? It is by There was not a cloud in the heavens, but comparing the Highland Character with distance, these men rushed on their cause, the English at that time, that we can resolve the difficulty. The fact is, that by commerce, manufactures, peace and pros-Prince, but "did he lead?" The History of a former age had been obliterated. looked at steadfastly, seemed to be turning eyes sparkled like diamonds with the fever make selemess an indispensable quality of the world can hardly afford such an in- They had no visions of imagination; no Giants on the mountains; no Spirits in tional music; no bonds of generosity .---Much was heard of the balance of trade, and more of profit and loss. The useless ness of sentiment without the sober guidance of the judgment and of the understanding has been already pointed out; it now remains to be shewn that along with the judgment and understanding there must Had they been joined by the northern be elevated sentiment to complete the character. In a commercial country; abilities and science cannot defend the inhabitants without such a spirit. The romantic senciple, the Rebellion would have been suc- despised on the Stock Exchange, or even in the Royal Society, must not be banished from the Land; or, if they be, we shall general cause of human liberty defeated; become, like Holland; surrounded by the and all this arising from a mistake, from a Images of its commercial greatness; but misstatement of hereditary right. This, and no longer, that same Holland, which had this alone, led Scotland to stand by the defied Philip, and, had defeated the armies of Louis. In saying thus much, it is not | Coast. We should not, as some have done, in- intended to detract from the blessings of sult these brave men, these heroes of the commerce and opulence, but to assert, Highlands: they were not led on by the that, without personal virtue, and personal hope of plunder and ambition: no, it was spirit, they have a tendency to draw on affection to the Chief, in the follower; it ruin. This spirit therefore, should be chewas loyalty to the Prince, in the Chief .- rished; and, this cannot be done by press-This, it was, which made them boast of it, | ing hard on the democratical part of the ing education from the poor: it can only tions of heriditary right-As it was sung be done, by means, contrary to these; by accustoming each man to consider himself as of importance, and to take an interest in the affairs of his native country.

Such are the reasonings which force themselves upon our attention when considering this important and romantic feature in the History of Great Britain.

The young Student is cautioned against a hasty decision; his enthusiastic admiration for the noble Highlanders must not blind him to their errors; nor must he be too eager to condemn the apathy of the catch the divine flame; but heroic senti- English. An attentive perusal of Home. dark blue ripple of the sea breeze, when a Smollett, LaCretelle and Gibbon will give rushing noise passed over my head. by the aid of Walter Scott, the Chevalier large carrion crow of the tropics, sailing, in such comprehensive terms may be inclu-

SELECTED.

MY CHILDHOOD'S HOME.

BY MRS. NORTON.

And drunk of the cup of delight :

- I have danced to the gavest measure
- In the halls of dazzling light ; have dwelt in a blaze of splendour,
- And stood in the courts of kings ; I have snatched at each toy that could render More rapid the flight of time's wings.
- But vainly I've sought for joy or peace, In that life of light and shade :
- And I turn with a sigh to my own dear home-The home where my childhood played.
- When jewels are sparkling round me, And dazzling with their rays.
- In life's first early days. I sigh for one of the sunny hours,
- Ere day was turned to night:
- For one of my nosegays of fresh wild flowers, Instead of my jewels bright.
- I weep when I gaze on the scentless buds Which never can bloom or fade;

And I turn with a sigh to those gay green field The home where my childhood played.

From Blackwood's Magazine. HEAT AND THIRST-A SCENE II JAMAICA.

away, and the sea breeze had not set in--there was not a breath stirring. The penat the distance of a cable sile ught yes would not distinguish the water-line, nor tell where the substance ended and shadow began, until the casual dashing of a bucket overboard for a few moments broke up What is the simple fact mentioned by the phantom ship; but the wavering fragments soon reunited, and she again floated double, like the swan of the poet. The heat was so intense that the iron stancheons of the awning could not be grasped with the hand, and where the decks were not screened by it, the pitch boiled out from the seams. The swell rolled in and apparently make a fruitless attempt to haps at the very foundation of that respect. from the offing in long shining undulations, drive the gallinaso from its prey. Hea- In England it may with some truth be statlike a sea of quicksilver, whilst every now and then a flying fish would spark out from the unruffled bosom of the heaving water, and shoot away like a silver arrow, until it dropped with a flash into the sea again. a quivering blue haze hung over the land, through which the white sugar-works and a thin smoke, whilst each of the tall stems ed ready to crack. But in the midst of dressed, for the chance of hearing some perity, the generous and chivalric feelings of the cocoa-trees on the beach, when this desolation, his deep set, coal black good things occasionally, and who does not round with a small spiral motion, like so of his sufferings; there was a fearful fasci- in his society, may do remarkably well at the air; no Fairies in the forest; go na- hills, even in the immediate vicinity, which increased as they receded, until the blue mountains in the horizon melted into sky. The crew were listlessly spinning oakum, _ ... Aqua, aqua"-we had not a drop of country are better judges of bees' wings and mending sails, under the shade of the awning; the only exceptions to the general languor were Johncrow the black, and Jackoo the monkey. The former (who timents of nature although they may be hanging by the tail from the dolphin strik- tonces, oh Dios, dexa me verlo"--- and he the immediate part of the deek called the which infinitely adorn it. The conversalike yours would be a good ting for a sailshall sing to you, how dat Corromantee gainst the ship's side--- He was dead. rascal, my fader, was sell me on de Gold

> "Two red night-cap, one long knife, All him get for Quackoo, For gun next day him sell him wife---You tink dat good song---Jackoo ?"

"Chocko, chocko," chattered the monkey, as if in answer. " Ah you tink so---

I looked up and saw a gallinaso, the ters. There are very few travellers, (and they are lights that will deceive us, if they Johnstone, Mr. and Chambers, he will come contrary to the habits of its kind, seaward ded most males from the age of fourteen on this interesting subst over the brig. I followed it with my eye, and upwards,) but must have noted an im-attention was attracted by a dark speck far of things during the first week's occupancy the first act in a long drama of happiness.

fellow ! give way, men"--- and I fired my whether you can only tag two rhymes, onfrom the boat into the air, but immediately and palm them for your own, or write like alighted again, to ow astonishment, vulture-like, with outstretched wings, upon the is said to do. On the eighth day the hand-

Under the shadow of this horrible plume, transit, etc. Generally speaking, the ions, the face seemed on the instant to alter like | hotels, boarding-houses, and places of puba hideous change in adream. It appeared lic entertainment characterize the manners to become of a deathlike paleness, and a- of a people. In England there are scarcenon streaked with blood. Another stroke ly such things to be found in the fashionaof the oar-the chin had fallen down, and ble world as tables d'hote, or the boardingthe tongue was hanging out. Another house sitting-room of the United States. pull-the eyes were gone, and from their In the coffee-rooms and saloons of first-rate Sir Robert Walpole (a man, by the bye, The Torch was lying at suchor in Blue- and flowing down the cheeks. It was the may mingle with respectable male society. a coquet than a good, strong, durable pasing coffin we found the body of another. a more particular introduction. In the sailor, doubled across one of the thwarts. United States the inmate of the house has with a long Spanish knife sticking between iraction, achiffette popular mas and , wherey

and empty. over the bow, and begun to tow the boat the French monarchs were fully sensible calculated to remind the company of their to the ship, than the abominable bird that of, who, at least during the old regime, we had scared setled down into it again, dined in public. The kindiler and better may be the subject of conversation, or what notwithstanding our proximity, and began feelings are called forth by the public dis- the character and condition of the interloto peck at the face of the dead boy. At play of pleasing manners on the part of this moment we heard . a gibbering noise, the class who possess emphatically the resand saw something like a bundle of old pect of mankind. On the other hand, the rags roll out from beneath the stern-sheet, circumstance of general privacy lies perven and earth, what an object met our ed, that the nobility serve not only as a poeyes! It was a full grown man, but so litical but a moral check to the haughty prewasted, that one of the boys lifted him up tensions of the uneducated, and unamiable however, not the less stoop to throw away by his belt with one hand. His knees wealthy; and the middling and lower classwere drawn up to his chin, his hands were es of society contemplate the fact with great any thing male that crossed her path; and like the talons of a bird, while the falling in satisfaction, that those who more immeditures gave an unearthly relief to his fore- not at the top. But we are like a ship at overseers' houses on the distant estates ap- head, over which the horny and transpa- sea lying-to- we begin to drift a little .peared to twinkle like objects seen through | rent skin was braced so tightly that it seem- | The candidate for a good dinner, and well many endless screws. There was a dreamy nation in their flashing brightnes, contrast- the best ordinaries in London, and in the indistinctness about the outlines of the ed with the deathlike aspect of the face, coffee and travellers' rooms in the country. and rigidity of the frame. When sensible The gentlemen of the whip sometimes of our presence he tried to speak, but could crack a pleasant joke; most of them are on the contrary, it be asked in what the water in the boat. "El muchaco esta mo- and the age of sherry. It was at one of riendo de sed-Aqua." We got on board, and the surgeon gave tale related :- A second mate of an English cided superiority over the former? I the fellow some weak tepid grag. It act merchant vesset had in the latteries of the should not hesitate to place the unknown was an improvisatore of a rough stamp) sat ed like magic. He gradually uncoiled West Indies, succeeded in inducing the charm in that dash of coquetry which is out on the howsprit, through choice, be- himself, his voice, from being weak and captain of the vessel, and that with the youd the shade of the canvass, without husky, became comparatively strong and greatest difficulty, to fight a French privahat or shirt, like a bronze hust, busy with clear. "El hijo---Aqua para mi pedrillo teer, which the result showed carried a larhis task, whatever that might be, singing at -No le hace para mi --- Oh la noche pas- ger force than it would have been prudent the spur, is kept on the alert, and throws the top of his pipe, and between whiles ado, la noche pasado!" He was told to to have withstood; but the brave fellow out all her fire in a thousand graceful and confabulating with his hairy ally, as if he compose himself, and that his boy would acted like a second Nelson. He was at lively movents, which are not strictly nebad been a messmate. The monkey was be taken care of. "Dexa me verlo en- the helm, at the bows, loading the guns in cessary to the progression of discourse, but er, admiring what Johncrow called "his crawled, grovelling on his chest, like a slaughter-house, manning the stern-chasers, tional powers of a man of wit can only be own dam ogly face in the water." --- "Tail crushed worm across the deck, until he and all nearly in as many minutes. The excited by the desire to shine; but between got his head over the port-sill, and looked privateer depended on boarding, and that desire and the wish to please there is or, Jackoo, it would leave his two hands down into the boat. He there beheld the the two vessels were at one time locked; a vast difference. The desire to shine is free aloft---more use, more hornament too, pale face of his dead son; it was the last but Kingsley, (for that twas his name,) took apt, at every turn, to betray the speaker I'm sure, den de piece of greasy junk dat object he ever saw---" Ay de mi;" he the helm at the important moment, and into presumption, and to stimulate him to hangs from the Captain's taffrail .-- Now I ground heavily, and dropped his face a- eased off the Demerara from the privateer; usurp too large and overpowering a share

From the Mirror.

BOARDING-HOUSES AND HOTELS. Few persons there are who, after a long day's peregrination, and especially if the seasonably found a comfortable room, good ings, having no regular surgeon on board, female society of the highest polish, is no sensible honimal !--- What is dat? shark? fire, a pair of wax candles, (tallow ditto at Jackoo, come up, sir; don't you see dat present not the thing,) and a very well furas the good, and the true cause. It was Nation; this cannot be done by withhold- big shovel-nosed fish looking at you? Pull nished larder to back all other pretensions, your hand out of water, Garamighty!" but have felt a sort of pleasant sensation. The negro threw himself on the gammon- which is not unaptly expressed by the old ing of the bowsprit to take hold of the poor household word comfort. On the other ape, who, mistaking his kind intention, hand, if a man perchance has been shakand ignorant of his danger, shrunk from ing and knocking at a door alternately for him, lost his hold, and fell into the sea. some couple of hours, in the winter solstice, then dashed at his prey, raising his snout imagination with the speedy enjoyment of firm had the vessel been captured, and be- though she never directly reminds you of it The shark instantly sank to have a run, and about the time of midnight, feeding his over him, and shooting his head and shoul- all the good things which that aforesaid ing private property, nothing further was to herself; and she makes it impossible to lisders three or four feet out of the water, door, together with four walls (of brick or with poor Jackoo shrieking in his jaws, wood, as the case may be) enclose, and whilst his small bones crackled and crunch- should, instead of hearing the words, "oped under the monster's triple row of teeth. en sesame," see presented to his astonished Whilst this small tragedy was acting --- vision, and towards his person, a long hearted negro--- I was looking out towards seems ready to vomit forth incontinently pers, of the bravery of their son, and wel- the author prevailed over the coquetry of the eastern horizon, watching the first the dire contents of a well-charged gun, such a person must, we think, understand the meaning of the phrase comfortable quar-

out in the offing, with a little tiny white of a new domicil, and the same set of ob- She flew to her brave sailor's parents. hung sail. With my glass I made it out to be a jects after a longer period has transpired. upon their necks, and demanded him in any ship's boat, but I saw no one on board, and especially if you are what is called an state; showed her rosy arms, and protested and the sail was idly flapping about the easy man, that is, can put up, with almost that she could labor for both. In the meanany kind of treatment without complain- while the refusal of the pittance on the part On making my report, I was desired to | ing. At the first your basin and tumbler of the owners of the Demerara had sunk pull towards it in the gig; and as we ap- in the sleeping-room are regularly filled eve- deep into the manly spirit of Kingsley, who proached, one of the erew said he thought ry day, and a clean towel placed; and you could not endure the thought that his dehe saw some one peering over the bow. are assigned, if it is winter, a place near pendence for life should rest upon the labor We drew nearer, and I saw him distinctly. the fire in the sitting-room. If you should of his wife, or in default of that, upon his "Why don't you hand the sheet aft, and happen to possess a decent person, are be- parents. Day after day he refused his food; tween twenty and thirty, and there should his pistols, faithful in the fight, had been He neither moved or auswered, but, as be unmarried and marriageables females in kept every night under his pillow. One the boat rose and fell on the short sea rais- the family, you are the lion of the week; morning he was found stretched on the bed ed by the first of the breeze, the face kept but make the most of your time, for your lifeless, with a shot through his heart. The mopping and mowing at us over the gun- days are numbered. During that time all poor lost Mary may be now seen every day, the albums in the house will be open to you, with tresses floating in the wind, and arms "I will soon teach you manners, my fine and what you write in them will be lauded, extended, demanding him of the coaches which pass through the village. The pasmusket, when the crowthat I had seen rose ly abstract verses from some obsolete book, sengers are differently affected-some, on hearing the melancholy fate, which is hour-Mrs. Hemans, and like what Mrs. Norton ly related, execrate the avarice which could cause such heart-rendering woes; some kerchief passes, and you may inscribe Hic give money for her support; and a few, besides the donation, drop a silent tear. From the New Monthly Magazine. COQUETRY.

Concluded. But in the more honest epoch of youth, and cauld has elewhere observed, "the greatest miracle which love can work," it is only the entree, and he is entitled to mingle with | because coquetry is so rarely developed in small water cask in the bow was staved, sant -circumstances, doubtless, regulate the and grimacing and acting without stint or pause. They are for ever laying traps to We had no sooner cast our grappling and retirement is unfavorable to popularity catch attention; and every movement is presence and pretensions. No matter what cuters, they contrive to give the discourse a turn to themselves, and to inveigle the company into a compliment to their person. I remember a lady of this description, d'ailleurs a woman of some talent, who turned her coquetry to a good account by the power she obtained through it over persons of weight and influence in society: she would, a lure on a peasant or a tradesman, or on after having pinned a general officer or a of his chocolate-coloured and withered fea- ately cause their greatest mortifications are judge to her apron-string for an entire morning, would triumph in putting a common fellow to confusion, or making him own, by some quaint and extraordinary remark, the influence of her charms.

In her instance, indeed, a perfect bon ton,

and some wit, redeemed the failure, and sometimes rendered it even agreeable; but generally speaking, there is nothing more obtrusive and troublesome in conversation, than a coquet of this inordinate calibre. If, only utter a low moaning sound. At length adepts at small talk, and no people in the difference consists, between the conversation of a man of a lively fancy and wellstored mind, and that of a woman of sense and spirit, or why the latter possesses a deinseparable, from female nature. The woman constantly agacee by the desire to please, like an high-spirited horse that feels two-thirds of the crew of the Demerara fell of the conversation. It leads, also, to an in the action, and towards the latter part of unhappy forgetfulness of the genius of the the fight Kingsley had both his legs carried time and place, to a disregard of " les conaway by a cannon shot. The privateer af- venances." The wish to please, on the ter this would have captured the brig, but other hand, shows itself as much in forfor the circumstance of a very brisk gale bearance as in action, and it developes a decoming on, and the fore-topmast of the licacy of tact that leaves every one preformer being wounded. Kingsley's suffer- sent satisfied with himself. The charm of on the vessel's passage home to London, where so well known, or so powerfully felt cannot be described. When arrived there as in France; and it is in France, if any the surgeons pronounced that his active life where, that coquetry is reduced to an artwas closed, as the power of locomation I had almost said, a science; for in a French could not with all the aid of art be restored. woman of any talent, the instinct is con-The owners of the vessel were applied to trolled and subdued with a nicety that parfor a pension for poor Kingsley, in cousi- takes almost of philosophy. With such a deration of his good conduct; but it came woman, no matter what her age or persoout in the course of this application, that nal appearance may be, the sex of the it would have been for the interest of the speaker is never absent from your thoughts, resided in a cottage in Kent, which the which will sometimes steal over the senhumble couple, by constant labor, although ses in male society, however brilliant, or advanced in life, contrived to keep over however profound. In this particular, their heads. They had heard, as the action | Madame de Stael was an exception among was related at full length in all the newspa- her countrywomen. In her, the vanity of To return to his birth place and become a idea of herself, she disserted when she burden to his aged parents was not the on- should have discoursed, and talked only ly difficulty which Kingsley had to solve in for display. Byron measured her very justhis resolute mind: there was one within ly, when he preferred her conversationthe limits of that parish who had figured to for an hour. By reducing herself to the leher eager imagination the return of her vel of a man, she lost a large part of that