Apostles directed their course, not to the herce Barbarians of the South and North of Asia, but to the learned cities of Greece and Rome, and St. Paul while he readily encounters the reasoning and eloquence of the Athenians, makes no attempt to convert the Barbarous people of Melita. To this it might be sufficient to answer, that as the Deciples were not [perfect of human prudence, it would have taught them that in the commencement of Christianity, it was of more importance to convert the civilized gence has reached us from Europe, as than the barbarous nations, because of their greater influence ever the rest of mankind. But our answer is, that the Apostles were bring us the King of England's Speech directed by the Holy Spirit when to preach and when to be silent---what nations to pass, and among what nations to sojourn. Nor should it be forgotten that the method of introducing the Gospel and promoting its propagation as well the instruments used for these glorious purposes, have generally been in opposition to the wisdom and expectations of the world--- and there is reason to believe that such will be the case till it has spread over the whole earth---for believe, will be among its leading feathose who rank highest in worldly wisdom tures, and the state of affairs in the Cartwright, Kirkpatrick, Lynch, Rourk. Christian nations.

In this Province religion and education are proceeding hand in hand, and this it Ministry, is also an engrossing subject conded, were unanimously Carried. work in full reliance in God; for we are already some of the tribes which were the most miserable and abandoned, won over by kind attention to their wants, enchanting drunkeness for temperance-a precarious subsistance for a fixed residence-and nistration, headed by the Duke of Wel- opinion that the extension of its Capiat the same time making astonishing progress in the knowledge and practice of Christianity.

more ignorant of them begin to preceive that they can no longer live in their ancient manner, miserable as it is, but that they must, in order to preserve life, become cultivators of the soil—hence they are desirous to exchange their wigwams, for comfortable dwellings; an erratic life exposed to all the vicissitudes of hunger and cold to a fixed residence. To Your venerable Society I therefore appeal on behalf of the deacon Strachan, on the conversion Indians of Upper Canada-send Missionaries to help them so that their temporal and spiritual benefits may be cared for both at the same time.

Of their success their can be no reasonable doubt, for the hand of the Lord is not shortned that it connot help; here as among other nations Christianity will be found to civilize while it converts. The history of the propogation of the Gospel tell us that the Christian convert over leaps the common progress of Society, and makes the advance of conturies at a single step. The is indeed no process by which the ozan descringually anticafficionally range and the dignity of a rational and intelluctual being, as by the teaching of the Gospel.
