MOLECULES.

Dr. Schultze of Carlsruhe, has published a pamphlet containing a detail of observations made by the microscope in investigating the accuracy of Mr. Robert Brown's statement-" that all bodies, organised or unorganised, contain animated particles, having a mo-Dr. Schultze has arrived at results tlemen's quite opposite to those of Mr. Brown. He maintains-first, that the motion of the molecules is by no means spontanethey are placed in a liquid which eva- and Stationery. porates with difficulty-in oil, for instance—the motion ceases; while it is ther. By attentively studying these motions, Dr. Schultze has been enabled to distinguish three kinds, arising from three different causes-the first, ascent or descent, produced by the evaporation of the liquid; the second, oscillation, (similar to the supination and pronation of the hand,) produced by the successive imbibition of the particles; the third, rotation, produced by the dis-2dly, that Mr. Brown having advanced fushionable articlesthat the same particles which he has perceived in the pollen of plants also appear as elementary molecules in all the organs of animals and vegetables, and are the same as those described by Bullon, Needham, Wrisberg, Muller, and Edwards: Dr. Schultze denies the truth of the proposition as it respects organic particles. They differ in form and size, according to the animals, and according to the organs. And the reasoning upon this accords with the facts. For what explanation of the different vital phenomena could we hope to obtain, if these opinions of a complete similarity among all the elementary parts of organised bodies were confirmed by observation. As for the texture of inorganic bodies, in which Mr. Brown professes to have found these molecules as elementary parts, it appears to Dr. Schultze that they are the product of art, and that any degree of size that one chooses may be given them by pulveri-
