One of the Many intimated in his last, that these would be likely to do more good than the plan I have adopted. I perfectly agree with him, PROVIDED, however, that the kind of beings I had to deal with had any disposition to listen to reason, or be won by kindness. But I am too old not to know perfectly well that the more kindly such persons as Egerton, his red-headed Secretary, Diego, &c. are dealt with, the deepor will they set their determined course of villainy. When they mock and scoff at reason, and insult and defame dignity and authority, and trample good nature under their feet, there is no way of treating them but by a discipline suited to a mad-house. Aware of this disagreeable necessity, I set out with this expectation full in my eye, and I shall keep to it while I see cause to alter my practice. They have set out with a determination to carry all before them and to turn the world upside down: I shall oppose them and expose their iniquity with an unsparing hand as long as it hath strength to wield a pen, or there is a prospect of doing good; and I have yet to say, if no misfortune happens me, enough of the same class with what I have already said, to furnish you with a weekly page for a twelvemonth. So I hope the Saints and Patriots and promoters of Religious Liberty will not be discouraged. I assure them that I can hold out as long as the whole gang, with Mr. Hume at their head, and Pre-Established Harmony in their hands.

For the Kingston Chronicle.

Mr. Chronicle,-Last Saturday afternoon, while passing the Methodist Church, in a village not a hundred miles from Kingston, I was surprised to see our worthy Representative and the Parson sitting within the Holy Altar. Such of September next, a 3rd instalment of a singular anomaly induced me to step in, when I two pounds ten shillings currency on found a "Squire" on his legs, addressing some 50 or 60 persons about the injustice of them, " praying to be taxed for a CountyCourt House and Gaol." The Resolve, however, passed for the tax; after which, our M. P. P. proposed a tax upon horses, carriages, and so forth, for the improvement of the roads, which was lost. Then a smooth-faced looking simpleton got up with some slips of paper in his hand, and, sans ceremonie, began reading his first resolve, "thanking late wayests and Ministers, for their internal measures since they came into power." The Parson, without waiting for any discussion, put it to the vote in such a manner as showed that hands was made, which was declared by the Parson as an "unanimous vote;" but several voices rose and said they did not vote, and iman obscure part of the country addressing His Majesty at the present time upon such a subject. Among the speakers were the M. P. and and the Squire; the poor Parson was seemingly sadly vexed : he got up and preached about the duty of "loving subjects" addressing His Majesty. The vote was again called for, when 10 or 12 hands were held up, which sadly disturbed his unanimity. Then the smooth-faced gentleman as before began reading their second resolve, which went to thank His Majesty for conferring the power of marrying upon the Methodists; in fact, the tenor of their resolves was too palpable --- they were the same series as the Mackenzie meeting of the York Market Place. Upon the second resolve being read the Squire stood up, and quite apropos, recommended the meeting to be broke up, and retire to their respective places of abode, and in their prayers they might "recommend the King and his Ministers to the care and protection of God, and render thanks for all the benefits received," which was seconded, and the meeting forthwith

Now, Mr. Chronicle, I would ask you if you think it becoming a Clergyman to preside at a political meeting, and that, too, within the Holy of Holies? in the very altar where I have found him calling upon sinners to come before they would sink into Hell! and where many a weak penitent would kneel, and cry Save! Save!! or I sink!!! This same gentleman married two couple tast week under the new Act, from behind the counter, where he is daily in the habit of selling tobacco and snuff! for he is also a merchant, and carries on a very successful business!! Did you ever hear of such a medley of trades? But all this would be nothing if he would abstain in his discourses from slandering others, especially the Episcopal clergyman of the same place. He is a thorough Reformer in Church & State : he is to be found at the elections, drumming up votes for the good cause, and threatening their | this Property would do well to call at friends if they vote for any other than a Methodist that they will be turned out of the Society. I have a thousand anecdotes of the most monstrous absurdities which I may probably furnish at a future time if the above has not its proper effect; but enough for the present.

I am so thoroughly convinced of the danger that is arising in this country to its peace and prosperity by allowing those enthusiasts their sway, that I consider it the duty of every good subject to stand forth and put down their interference with the affairs of the State: as a body, let them follow their calling, in calling sinners to repentance, in promoting piety towards God, peace and good will among men, and refrain from the affairs of the State; then they may become useful and respected by their fellow subjects.
