The Chamber met at one o'clock, under the Presidency of the senior member, Count Duhatel, and after the verification of the powers of several Deputies, whose admission had been adjourned at the last meeting, they proceeded to the election of their Pre-

The Chamber, on being consulted, decided that the ballot should stand good in case the majority was more than one vote. The President then published the result of the election. The number of votes was 358; and the majority required, 180. M Girod de l'Aain having obtained 181 suffrages; M. Lafitte, 176; M. Dupont de l'Eure 1; M. The divisions of yesterday left no doubt on the step which M. Perrier would take. He had not disguised his sentiments. He made the election of a President of the Chamber of Deputies, the test by which to ascertain the principles and character of the new Chamber, and he did not dissemble his determination to retire in case of an unfavourable issue af the experiment. He is believed to have tendered his resignation immediately after the scrutiny which ended in the election of M. Girod de l'Ain.

Paris. Tuesday evening .- Up to four o' clock this day nothing has finally determined respecting the change of Ministry consequent upon the vote of yesterday but the retirement of M. Casimir Perrier. All Marshal Soult, came to the same determi nation, but his Majesty pressed a reconsideration of this step.

At 12 o'clock this day the Council assembled at the Palais Royal, when the resignation of M. An ultra combination was forming out of doors, and a list in circulation from M. Odillon Barron, General Lamarque, &c. At three o'clock this latter attempt was abandoned for the moment, principally, it is said, at the persuasion of M. Lafitte.

The London Courier makes the following remarks upon this result : M. Casimir Perier, sensible of the impossibility of retaining his place whilst he suffered the enemies offreedom to prevail, and being unwilling to plunge the country into war, sought the middle course, and attempted to form an alliance with our cabinet with reference to the contest in Poland. which would enable him to dictate to Russia without fearing the alternative of war. The urgency with which he pressed this point, and the sacrifices which he was ready to make on others, in order to occomplish this object, were known to us all along, & we have now before us a communication in which he says : "The hesitation of the British cabinet to assist our views may be productive of calamitons results. It may drive from office the present moderate men and introduce others who may create a storm in Europe which all its cabinets would not be able to subdue." We hope we shall never have to regret the non-compliance with the request; but this we are bound to say, whatever might have been the sympathy of our own ministers in favor of the Poles, there were reasons of state prudence, which made it necessary that the interference of Great Britain should be made on separate grounds.

"BRUSSELS, Aug. 2, 1831, (evening.)-The important intelligence has just reached us that General Chasse has declared that the armistice will be fat an end on Thursday, the 4th August at 9 o'clock in the evening. From the London Morning Herald of Aug. 5 There seems no doubt now, that the obstinacy of the King of Holland will lead to a war, or at least, prevent, for a time, that amicable adjustment of differences between the two divisions of the late kingdom of the Netherlands which the conferences of London were so anxious to promote, and which the accession of Leopold to the throne of Belgium seemed so likely to attain.
