ADDRESS TO MY NOSE.

What leads me on where'er I go, In sun and shade, and joy and wo, Through fog and tempest, rain and snow? My Nose

In youth's most ardent reckless day, And when arose disputes at play, What would be foremost in the fray? My Nose

And should my tongue rude blows provoke, What would protrude and brave each stroke, Till coral streams its pains bespoke? My Nose.

And falling in an airy bound, In chase of some new charm or sound? To save me-what came first to ground?

When some dark pass I would explore, With neither shut nor open door, What oft for me hard usage bore?

And when in want I yearned to eat, And hunger might my judgment cheat, What prompted me to food most sweet? My Nose.

And woods where bloomed the fairest flowers, What fed me with their fragrant powers? My Nose. Each eye may need in age a guide,

'Mid violet banks and woodbine bowers,

And when young helpmates I provide, Thy back thoul't lend for me a stride, meruse my wa or tote to mee, Who thus has felt and bled for me,

And can I e'er in care or glee,

No: when cold winter's winds blow high, And bite thee hard, and thou shalt cry, Thy tears with sympathy I'll dry,

And if for snuff thy love shall come, Thy slaves, my finger and my thumb, Shall faithful be, and bear thee some,

Still, as I follow thee along, Oh! may'st thou never lead me wrong, But thou must hush our sleeping song,

WOMAN'S FIRST LOVE .- "Love's first steps are upon the rose," says the proverb, "its second finds the thorn." Like the maiden of the fairy tale, we destroy our spell when we open it to examine in what characters it is written. In its ignorance is its happiness; there is none of the auxiety that is the fever of hope; no fears, for there is no calculation; no selfishness for it asks for nothing; no disappointment, for nothing is expected; it is like the deep quiet enjoyment of basking in the bright sunshine, without thinking of either how the glad warmth will ripen the fruits and flowers, or how the dark clouds in the distance forebode a storm. I doubt whether this morning twilight of the affections has the same extent of duration and influence in man that it has in woman; the necessity of exertions for attainment has been early inculcated upon him; he knows, that if he would win, he must woo; and his imagination acts chiefly as a stimulus. But a woman's is of a more passive kind; she has no motive for analyzing feelings whose future rests not with herself: more imaginative from early sedentary habits, she is content to dream on, and some chance reveals to herself the secret she would never have learnt from self investigation. Imbued with all the timidity, exalted by all the romance of a first attachment, never did a girl yet calculate on making what is called a conquest of the man she loves. A conquest is the resource of weariness; the consolation of disapof early love. Let Lord Byron say what he will of bread and butter, girlhood is a beautiful season, and its love, its warm, uncalculating, devoted love; destroys its immortality; and, thus brought to a level with the beginnings before; such laughter is more bitter; a thousand times more bitter than tears .-

DEED .- Some days ago, a singular circumstance took place in the parish of Alness, county of Ross, which proves that friendship is often but a thing of great distance from the parish church, a by a Caligula or Titus." respectable young couple were to be joined in marriage. The generous offer was gladly accepted, the clergyman had the satisfaction of joining them together, both seemingly very happy at the change in the "aspect of affairs" which had just taken place .- A friend in need is, undoubtedly, a friend indeed !- Scots-

REPUTATION is a property that belongs to every man, according to the general interpretation of the term. An individual may boast of a good, may be contented with a questionable, or distinguished by an evil reputation, as far as morals are concerned, whilst in physics, he may possess a reputation for skill, for ingenuity, for strength or agility, or possibly for dulness and stupidity. If we regard the word as connected with any degree of excellence, we at once associate it with very lofty qualities, such as goodness and greatness of soul, benevolence, generosity, and all the train of virtues that exalt humanity in their possession, and befriend humanity in their practice. Public opinion attaches a reputation, without, however, positively establishing a character, inasmuch as the latter has always some foundation, whilst the former arises from report, and may occasionally prove deceitful. The possibility of reputation My Nosc. being understood, is a great drawback to its absolute value, and as there is nothing tangible in it, as in character, we are necessarily compelled to take it upon trust .-- Johnson has observed that reputation is commonly lost because it at first, not by the suffrage of criticism, but by the fondness of friendship." But My Nosc. with all the disadvantages that may accrue from the possession of a pseudo, or false reputation, it is nevertheless desirable to confer it where we can; it may stimulate to virtue, and establish the real character from a love of the good report of others .- American Advocate.

SALT RHEUM. THIS inveterate disease which has L long baffled the art of the most experienced physicians, has, at length, found a sovereign remedy in Dr. La Crange's genuine ointment. Few cutaneous diseases are met with more reluctance by the physician, and none in which he is so universally successful. This ointment has stood the test of experience, and justly obtained an unparalleled celebrity. It immediately removes the scabs, gives a healthy action to the vessels of the skin, and its original colour and smoothness. Numerous recommendations might be obtained of its superior efficacy, but the proprietor chose that a fair trial should be its only commentator. It has in three or four weeks cured cases of fifteen and twenty years' standing, that had resisted the power of every remedy that was tried. It not only at once gives immediate relief in Salt Rheum, but cures Tinea Capitas, commonly called Scald Head, and all scabby eruptions peculiar to us-healthy children. There is nothing of a mercurial nature contained in it, and it may be used on infants or others under any circumstance whatever.
