

The literary war between Fraser, the Editor of Fraser's Magazine, and Bulwer the novelist, now Editor of the New Monthly Magazine, has produced the following shot from Fraser, in his January number for the present year.

A Christmas Carol, to the tune of "God save you Merry Gentlemen."

"Impious ante ARAM, atque auri caecus amor." —
 E. Aram was a pedagogue,
 So sullen and so sad;
 E. Bulwer was a gentleman,
 Wot pined as Colburn's Cad;
 And deeds of both, I grieve to say,
 Were werry, werry bad.

E. Aram he whipped little boys,
 With malice and with ire!
 E. Bulwer wrote whig articles,
 As Beelzebub did inspire;
 And both of them they did these things
 All for the sake of hire.

E. Aram killed a man one day,
 Out of a devilish whim;
 E. Bulwer did almost the same—
 A deed well nigh as grim:
 For Aram he murdered Daniel Clarke,
 And Bulwer he murdered him.

E. Aram's crime it was impelled,
 That cash he must purloin;
 E. Bulwer did his wickedness,
 For love of Colburn's coin:
 Alas! that money should debauch
 Two geniuses so fine!

E. Aram he was sent to jail,
 And hanged upon a tree;
 E. Bulwer is in Parliament,
 A shabby-genteel M. P.
 But if he writes such murdering books,
 What must his ending be?
 Why, that in Fraser's Magazine,
 His gibbet we shall see.

From the Quebec Mercury.
THE MOON—A GENTLEWOMAN.

"Why I will talk to thee upon this theme
 Until my eyelids will no longer wag."

The Moon is a gentlewoman—Prove it—I will. In the first place she is not seen at all times and seasons, in fair weather and foul—to-day, to-morrow, and all the year around! No, she comes at a stated time, and for a stated time; she does not bounce on you suddenly, making you start up at her approach to the manifest derangement of your plans and ideas (taking it for granted that you have such matters.) She does not "blast you with excess of light," she does not overwhelm you with a resistless flood of radiance, dazzling and blinding you, till you wish, with a sigh, that you were green spectacles, or the snow eyes of a Laplander, or that your own aching orbs were in the palms of your hands, so that you might draw your gloves over them! The Moon, like a well bred gentlewoman, glides in gently, courteously, and imperceptibly. When she first makes her appearance, ere she does not perk up her beams in the vain and unfeeling endeavour to outshine the superior glory because it is departing! No! she waits modestly until the heavens are her own, and then, her gentle light increases and deepens as if she blushed at her own effulgence. Nor is she wishful to shine alone; like a true gentlewoman, she consents that others should be bright beside herself; she calls the stars and they come forth, one by one, and gracefully deck her path with their permitted gleams. Nay, so courteous is she, that she allows the Aurora to play its "fantastic tricks" in her high presence—now its wandering fires spread an unfettered stream of light over a great portion of her azure path, and now they dart in sudden and fitful flashes, so nearly resembling the lightning, that the watcher of its mirth stops in involuntary apprehension of the thunder roll which he expects will follow—and, (by the way) what is the Aurora? can any body tell?

I've thought it, as I watched it fly,
 Amid the bright orbs burning,
 A radiant banner on the path,
 Of Cherubin returning.

Perhaps those glorious Angels sent,
 On Heaven's mission here,
 Who blushed to hear the sinner's oath,
 And wrote it with a tear.

I said the moon comes in gently and imperceptibly; first, if you live in the country, transferring a light tracery work from the shrubs and trees that surround your dwelling, to the side of your open window—then stealing quietly into your apartment, (from which you have the taste to banish candles) she presents you with a soft outline of herself, sitting like a shadowy Flora, amidst the flowers and leaves of the paper hanging that covers the wall. Has she not a most ladylike taste for flowers; have you never observed her in a garden hanging over white roses or lilies, blending her light with their purity, touching each leaf with her brightness, till you are almost at a loss to say which is the blossom, which the beam? Does not her influence soften down the harsh and gaudy hues of the peony, the poppy, and the tulip, till they look as modest and unobtrusive as herself; and will any one deny that the graceful and correct manners of a gentlewoman have the same redeeming influence over the peopies and peonies of the human race.

Is she not Shakespeare's Ladye Moon? Does not Sir Philip Sydney dwell on her "Inaugurated grace," and Milton place her in Paradise, and style her "apparent Queen?" She is also Gray's "Regent of the night." Charlotte Smith's "Queen of the silver bow," Does not Keats, (poor Keats) tell us that the

"Queen Moon upon her throne
 Is clustered round by all her starry fans," and we know that a Queen is a gentlewoman. She is likewise the awakener of our sympathies; for example—
 "What is there in thee, Moon, that thou should'st move my heart so potently," asks the last poet I quoted; again he continues—

"Thou dost pine
 For one as sorrowful: thy cheek is pale
 For one whose cheek is pale: thou dost bewail
 His tears who weeps for thee?"

Have you ever looked on the moonlight slumbers of an infant? How the soft ray dwells on the innocent face of the happy thing that lies before you, in all the "rapture of repose," till it lights into an irradiation above the white unstained brow, where the cares of this world, its sorrows, and (alas!) its sins have not as yet set their seal. If you have looked on such a sight as this and not felt rebuked and abashed by its holiness and beauty, go to!—I say you have no sympathy in you. Watch by her light the countenance of the dead. There she spreads a mild effulgence over the sallow and rigid features till they appear to brighten into a smile, and the sorrowing friends beholding it, take comfort; for it seems to speak an assurance that the freed spirit is in one of those "many mansions" where the darkness and the light are both alike. Is not the moon therefore like a perfect gentlewoman, the awakener of every body's sympathies. She is the confidant of our truest affection; is she not? Did you ever fall in love? (as the saying is) parlant de cela. I wish some one would change the phrase—I don't like it. Thou have you confessed to, and sworn by, the "moon that tipped with silver all"—(we have no "yewes" here I believe)—"the tree tops" in your vicinity, that you loved some other better than yourself! On this part of my subject I shall not dilate, for I am (I make no scruple to avow it) of the genus old maid—and whatever "soft impeachment" I have felt, have long since shared the fate of my "nods and becks and wreathed smiles;" they are past and are forgotten.

A thousand "forest birds by day sing to the golden moon," says somebody or other; but the moon being a gentlewoman, and no coquette, listens to the strains of one, and one alone. I wonder though that poets in their "fine frenzies" make the nightingale the lover of the rose instead of the Lady Cynthia. To be sure, were the fancy altered, our Canadian moon would, like myself, be a single gentlewoman, without a suitor, since the nightingale "le chanteur de nuit et de l'amour" does not make our western woods vocal with his "amorous descants."

Perhaps you will reply to my "tirade sur la lune" that the charms I have extolled so highly are borrowed. My answer is this: if she borrows, she lends, and a great many other gentlewomen—Taisons la—and now are you convinced that the moon is a gentlewoman? Then will I go on, and prove her also, an alchemist. Does she not turn water into silver? Did you ever see her try her art on the St. Lawrence, or on Lake St. Charles, or on the Falls of Montmorency? Have you ever beheld her on the ocean laying down a pathway of light for the weary and homeward bound vessels, tracking amid the dark and angry waters a way of safety and radiance; and the midnight watch, (many sailors read their Bibles,) thinks, as he gazes on it, of the resplendent pillar which conducted the Hebrew wanderers over the voiceless wilderness—but stop, I wish to describe her on the St. Lawrence transmuting its many waves—and—

Good night. I am satisfied with your proving her a gentlewoman, and—A word in your ear,—I am afraid of your motto.

* The story of Le Fermé—"He shall march, by —, said my uncle Toby."

There are six things we like to see, yea a seventh in which our soul taketh delight; and there are six things, we dislike to see, even a seventh in which our soul findeth no pleasure.

1st. We like to see a lady like a town clock, regulating her motions by the progress of the sun; but we dislike to see a lady like a town clock, governing the movements of the whole neighborhood.

2nd. We like to see a lady like a spinning wheel, rapid and incessant in her motions; but we dislike to see a lady like a spinning wheel, deafening the whole family with her interminable clatter.

3rd. We like to see a lady like the moon, enlivening a winter's evening with a sociable face; but we dislike to see her like the moon, subject to frequent changes.

4th. We like to see a lady like a wax taper, of a flexible accommodating temper; but we dislike to see a lady like a wax taper, susceptible of every sort of impression.

5th. We like to see a lady like a doll, neatly and prettily dressed; but we dislike to see a lady like a doll, a mute inanimate piece of statuary.

6th. We like to see a lady like a breeze, soothing and invigorating in her influence; but we dislike to see a lady like a breeze, always raising a dust before her.

7th. And finally we like to see a lady like a weather vane, capable of making a variety of shifts; but we dislike to see a lady like a weather vane, veering with every change of wind.

SALT RHEUM.

THIS inveterate disease which has long baffled the art of the most experienced physicians, has, at length, found a sovereign remedy in Dr. La Crange's genuine ointment. Few cutaneous diseases are met with more reluctance by the physician, and none in which he is so universally successful. This ointment has stood the test of experience, and justly obtained an unparalleled celebrity. It immediately removes the scabs, gives a healthy action to the vessels of the skin, and its original colour and smoothness. Numerous recommendations might be obtained of its superior efficacy, but the proprietor chose that a fair trial should be its only commentator. It has in three or four weeks cured cases of fifteen and twenty years' standing, that had resisted the power of every remedy that was tried. It not only at once gives immediate relief in Salt Rheum, but cures Tinea Capitis, commonly called Scald Head, and all scabby eruptions peculiar to unhealthy children.

There is nothing of a mercurial nature contained in it, and it may be used on infants or others under any circumstance whatever.

PRICE, One Dollar per Bottle.
