TO A ROSE. After the Manner of Waller. By A. J. WILLIAMSON. Mistaken Rose, That pillow'd on Amanda's breast,

Invit'st repose;

How can'st thou hope to be a guest, In that cold tenement and rest. A form so soft, And with a heart so wondrous chill,

We meet not oft, And well-for the subjected will, Tho' check'd by reason, woes it still. Amanda's eyes, Beam not with one indulgent ray;

Those lovely dyes, Cheer'd by no genial warmth decay, Why wilt thou cast their sweets away? Yet, who may blame

Thy unrequited fondness flow'r? Man hugs his shame, Alike to him what sways the hour; Or beauty's smile, or beauty's low'r.

Charm'd by a look, A word-see him to thought incline; Sigh o'er the brook, And figure its light waves, to pine At his sweet slavery, divine.

Ah! many a snare Hath loveliness for me outspread; And many a Fair, Frown'd on my aching heart and head;= Yet am I nought embittered.

The time MAY come, Uninfluenc'd by delicious wiles, When I'll be dumb In woman's praise; but while she smiles, Oh! is he man can break her toils?

EPIGRAM. Come, gentle sleep, attend thy votary's pray'r, And, tho' death's image, to my couch repair; How sweet, tho' lifeless, yet with life to lie, And, without dying, oh! how sweet to die.

Some good new arrangement, and, although not exactly angel, however, urged him again to the West, and, it being leap year, an olive-green-coloured lady, d'un certain age, looking at his square shoulders and red whiskers, asked him to accept her hand, and she being blessed with a idea that he was longer in mixing the toddy piece of the world in the shape of a sugar than usual, but, in my clouded state of intelplantation, evidently was not an improper lect, this of course was attributed to his anxiematch for Tom, who, after blushing a little, ty to render it palatable. Away, then, we and ogling, with a fluttering heart consented sallied in the darkness of night, Tomby, the to be her's for ever.

Tom's countenance brightened. It was a shade between yellow-ochre and mahoganycolour-none of your wizened, half-dried faces, albeit as the head of an old drum-but a round, solid, rum-punch, brick-dust visage, that had braved a thousand storms, seated without a neck upon two brawny shoulders, from which were suspended arms like sledge hammers, that could enforce most powerful and weighty arguments-his countenance, I say, brightened as he exclaimed-" Well, my story is called the Pee-pee dance."

"The what?" said I.

" The what ?" said Dick Curtis.

"The Pee-pee dance," said Mr. Brittle, tossing over a glassful of the veritable Glasgow; "Don't you know?"-we grinned .-"Now, do not interrupt me," said Tom, "and My room was at the further extremity of this; I'll tell you, you white-livered spalpeens, that and after handing me the jug, with a scrape never saw further than your noses; and don't and a most laughable bow, old Tomby's face look so confoundedly foolish. It was very sweet, I rolled into bed to forget, as I situated in one of the most healthy spots in magined, the cares of the day in the arms of Jamaica, and elevated on the flank of one of Morpheus. the branches of the Liguanea range, where parted by the luxuriance of the foliage of the magnificent trees that skirted the road, interspersed with thick bushes and blossoming shrubs. The rugged and shaded masses of limestone, thinly covered, and in some places entirely exposed, contrasted well with the luxurious green around, and added to the pleasing effect. I was, however, glad to reach the house, which was situated in the midst of a level spot, built with piazzas round the lower part, and having a large balcony above, shot in with verandahs, through which the coal. breeze was allowed to circulate. As is usual in the West Indies, he received me with kindness; allotted a stable for my horse; and ordered a most excellent supper to be laid before us, to which I sat down with considerable relish. Hospitality, Dick, is not yet an obsolete word in Jamaica; many a 'lustiger Bruder,' many a good-fellow, still lives there to keep up the good old system. Mutton, and cold duck, and salted fish, and yams and plantains, wine, rum and water, all had charms for me which I could not resist. He was a neat, little, middle-aged man, with a grave face, but with a confounded leer in his left eye, that left you rather doubtful as to the ultimate and true expression of the tout ensemble of his physiognomy. 'Come, Brittle, fill your glass,' he would say every ten minutes, and it was some little time, 'ayont the twal,' before I recollected that early-rising was indispensable in the morning. 'My dear fellow, he easy; do not distress yourself, I'll see you're all right, said he, with a roll of his left eye; 'I'll make the necessary arrangements.' "No, I won't, said I, angry at his strange falling bodies, his head describing an arc of a circle which bad his feet for a centre, and hanging to by door, the old adage, 'Second ing pastily the hot putation, which seemed

"But how uncertain is our fondest hopes! the air is comparatively pure and cool after I had fallen into a slumber, and cannot tell leaving the hot parching climate of the sandy how long I had been down, when I was rousstreets of Kingston. The scenery ground was ed by a strange whispering, that made me list remarkably beautiful, and I well recollect the ten attentively. A conversation was taking air of delightful freshness and fragrance im- place between a male and a female voice, and
