GENTLEMEN,-I request that you will do me the favour to accept my very sincere thanks, for the expression of regret at my approaching departure from this Province, conveyed in this Address of the Committee of Trade of Mon-

It would have been highly gratifying to me, if the attention you are so obliging as to say I have bestowed upon the Commercial Interests, and the internal Communications of the Province had been attended with the beneficial results which might have been expected.

I entered upon the administration of the Government of this Province with every disposition to devote my undivided attention to objects of real utility. Under what circumstances, and through what means, my efforts to give effect to that disposition have been paralyzed and rendered unavailing, it is unnecessa- June, 3 days later from Paris, than had been ry for me now to describe; but the result has previously received; but they contain little been that at the close of an administration of intelligence of interest .- We translate the fol- from Algars to Spain. nearly five years duration, I have little to claim | lowing items. to, beyond an ardent desire to be serviceable to the Province, without the power of accomplish-

Be assured, however, Gentlemen, that that desire to be serviceable to Lower Canada, will not desert me when absent from, and no longer officially connected with it; and that on my return to the seat of the Imperial Government, I shall not fail to urge the expediency of preserving to you the advantages you already enjoy, and the good policy of extending to these Provinces such other advantages as may not be inconsistent with the general interests of the Empire.

In answer to the concluding passage of your Aldress, I will only say, that during the whole course of my Administration, it has been my anxious duty to discharge my public duties with justice and strict impartiality.

Macbeth-the scene from the Merchant of are not informed-probably the former. In the scenes from Shakspeare, his reading in two such very difficult parts as | ing the transmission of any merchandizes those of . Macbeth and his lady, and in the high | which may serve as munitions of war through wrought passages he selected, showed how completely he had studied his art, and how thoroughly he had rendered himself master of his author. In the scene selected between Shylock and Tubal, the alternate working of rage at the reports of his daughter's extravagance, and of exultatian at Antonio's misfortunes, till he raises his passion up to a perfect whirlwind of resentful hatred, was given with terrific effect. The scene from the Iron Chest is also one of great difficulty; in it the high eninded Sir Edward relates to his Secretary the secret of the murder he had committed, which preys upon his mind and influences his whole character. We had seen Mr. Hows in this character formerly, when he played as an amateur, and his reading last night enabled us to judge of the very great improvement he has effected by study and practice. The lighter scenes which concluded the entertainment were from Speed the Plough, and were those in which Farmer Ashfield, Dame Ashfield, Sir Able Handy and Bob Handy appear,-in these Mr. Hows was very happy in his transitions, in the dialogue, from one character to another, and did great justice to the genuine comic fire with which they have each been sketched by the author. It appears to us that Mr. How's serious readings may be considered as delineations of the passions, whilst his comic scenes are selected for pourtraying personalities or eccentric characters, and they are wrought out to produce very good effect; but that effect is only fully felt by those who are conversant with dramatic literature, and whose imagination can supply the niatus which others feel, from the want of that aid which a dialogue receives, when carried on by actors, with all the assistance dress and stage decorations afford. For this reason dramatic readings being felt only by the few, cannot, in their nature, prove so attractive as acted pieces. Mr. Hows, we learn, will give a dramatic soirée at Three Rivers, tomorrownight .- (Quebec Mercury.

THE SPANISH INTERVENTION.

Enlistments for Spain are represented to be going on with great activity in England, while arms, ammunition, and transports are provided with all possible expedition. 'The French Government is reproached by the Gazette, for its want of corresponding activity.

The siege of Bilboa was commenced by the Carlists on the 14th, and was pressed with commandant from St. Sebastian, but only one thousand men could be spared from the garrison. Zumalacarreguy was severely wounded on the 16th, and resigned the command to general Praso. A rumor prevailed at Bayonne on the 15th, that the Carlists had been defeated in a severe engagement near Vittoria, but no subsequent accounts had been received confirming the intelligence.
