It was late when the party broke up, and, as I took my leave of the Prince, he once more expressed himself in gracious terms toward me, and gave me personally an invitation to breakfast at Hanslon, on the following Saturday.

Chronicle & Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1841.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,

The following is a copy of the Bulletin issued this morning by his Excellency's Physician:—

BULLETIN.

His Excellency has passed an extremely bad night, and all his symptoms are much aggravated this morning.

The Session of Parliament was to have closed yesterday, and the Speakers of both Houses had received Messages to say that in consequence of the state of health of His Excellency the Governor General, he would be under the necessity of requesting the attendance of both branches of the Legislature at the Government House, at 3 o'clock.

Members were assembling to proceed thither when another Message was received, to say, His Excellency was so ill as to be unable on that day to Prorogue Parliament—and it was deferred to this day.

Precisely at 12 o'clock this day a message was brought to the door of the House of Assembly requiring the attendance of the House in the chamber of the Legislative Council to hear the speech from the Throne, and to witness the Royal assent to the bills which had been enacted this Session. General Clitherow acted in the capacity of Deputy Governor. We give a copy of the speech in another part of our paper—and in our next we will give a list of the bills which have passed, as well as those reserved for Her Majesty's pleasure.

Thus has terminated, perhaps, the most important Colonial Parliament which ever assembled, and we say in language the most emphatic, that it has been for Lord Sydenham a glorious achievement,—when we consider the incongruous materials of which the Parliament has been composed—the magnitude and importance of the measures which have been carried into operation, the conflicting interests which have existed, the newness to office of these gentlemen to whom the management of the public business has been intrusted, the relative position which some of these gentlemen have borne and still bear to each other, when we consider the state of political parties in both Provinces, with their antagonist interests and objects, the result of this session will throw a splendor around the political character of Lord Sydenham as a statesman which must and will be appreciated so long as Canada exists. We sincerely trust he may live long to enjoy his well earned laurels—and to assist by his counsels the well working of the plans of which he has so successfully laid the foundation, and would to God that I did not say this, we had not the most melancholy reason to fear that it is a wish which we dare scarcely to hope can be realised.

We are not ignorant that there are many who will differ with us as to our views of the result of Lord Sydenham's administration—but we firmly believe that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, they will be persons whose political opinions are opposed to those of Lord Sydenham, or whose interests have in some way or other been affected by the necessary changes which have been made.

We regret exceedingly that we cannot give to the public the speeches of Messrs. McGill, De Blaquiere and Morris, on the Bill which was brought up to the Legislative Council for the payment of wages to the Members. No one who heard them could fail to be deeply impressed, as we were, with the strong conviction of the high tone of moral as well as political integrity, by which their conduct was marked. It was impossible not to see and to feel too, the value of a body composed of men who were determined not to sacrifice what was obviously right, to expediency, however they may draw down upon themselves the clamour and abuse of the other House, and even the disapprobation of the head of the Government. The question with them was not, is it expedient, but is it right or wrong? They saw that it was in principle wrong and unjust, and they were not to be deterred, by consequences from acting rightly because some temporary evil may arise. The straight-forward and manly speeches delivered by each of the gentlemen named, will long be remembered, to the honor of those who made them.

The bill on being returned was very considerably altered,—some clauses improved, and the title changed, which removed several of the objections,—which with the positive assurance that no attempt should be made to renew the principle of the bill next session, induced some of its opponents in the Council to give way. Messrs. De Blaquiere, Morris, and Hamilton, however, kept the position they had taken.
