cognised McLood again. He saw no one who was wounded as he went over to Davis's nor did he see McLeed. He says he saw a man whom he called McLevel, and that he was as sure it was McLeud, as he was while on the stand that McLeod was sitting before him. There is one consideration I will submit to you.-When you are to judge of the credit to be attached to a witness, much depends upon his appearance-his intelligence-whether his answers are such as to commend his testimony to you; and if after all you cannot attach full cerdit to it, you can give it such credit as you believe it is entitled to. It is argued by the prisoner's counsel that this man, from the durkness of the night, could not have seen the prisoner and speak as certainly as he now does, when seeing the man before him .-It is also observed that this witness, when speaking on this subject, said to David Bates that he knew nothing which would do McLeod any good or harm .-You have heard what explanation he gives. Men sometimes make careless remarks like this -- and if he made it to any one who might excuse him, would have been some apology, perhaps; but if what he has sworn be true, he could not in truth have declared that what he knew would do McLeod no good or harm. You have heard what has been said as to the restoration of his character. He is a man not very intelligent, in the humble walks of hie, and has not the opportunity of exhibiting how far be might withstand temptation if thrown in hi way. 100 have him before you, and you are to de cide what credit you shall have to give to min.

The next wi ness is Isaac P. Corson, a native i this state, who was at Chippewa the night the Caro-line was destroyed, and who says he saw the pri somer at Maclan's store in the afternoon, again ut! in the evening, and the next morning on the stoop. He heard him say he had killed a d-d Yankee and again a few days afterward, he heard him say that he should like another expedition like the Caro-I ne, and burn and cut out Buffalo. You remember his cross examination, and one fact it is proper you should notice. He was asked who was there, and you recollect his answer-that he remembred for the first time on the stand, that one Cuswell was there-and yet he afterward stated that he had while at Court, conversed freely with Caswell on this very subject. It is for you to judge, gentlemen, the probability of, this statement of the witness.

The next witness is Anson Quinby, from Penn sylvania, who testifies that he was at Chippewa with a load of hay-that he saw McLeod go out of Davis's at 9 in the evening-that he da not go home, although his residence was only two mile f om Chippewa; and that he slept that night about half way to his residence-but early in the morning when he returned to get his pay of the commissary, as he said, for his hay, he saw McLood on the bridge, and heard him say ', he had killed a Yankre and his blood on his sleeve." You will recollect that this witness went before

Mr. Lott a magistrate, to make an affidavit in re-Lation to this matter, but the magistrate refused to taket it because his character was so bad. He after ward made the offidavit before another justice .-Mr. Lott testifies that his character is very bad for veracity; and after a rigid cross-examination, he adhered to this declaration. Then Mr. Wetmore, a lawyer, who resides twenty miles from Quinby, says be once made inquiries to ascertain whether Quinly rould be improched, and found that he could; but as his testimony was then unimportant, he was not imp ached. But there may be eases when men have obtained such notoriety, as in any part of the country to be unworthy at belief; but you are the

He said he supposed he was obliged to roome, and he says Mr. Hawley, a lowyer of Euffelo, told him that he would him here on a process.—It is somewhat strange if such an opinion was given. He was impaired of how he knew that it was the prisoner—because he heard a man eay to him, "Albanuler McLeod, had we best let this name go I"—And another said, "Sandy McLeod, shall we go it and drink I" It is argued, gentlemen, that this is courely imprebable. It is for you to judge. But one rescumbtance had been emitted by the counsel. At the chase of this man's testimony he said, "If he ever catched McLeod on this side of the ricer he would serve Re Leod as McLeod And him." It is said that the clerk of the commissioners was ngaged in getting together the witnesses, and therefore suspicion should be attached to the commission But we have heard what was done. He acted as elerk for putting down the answers, as dictated to him by the commissioners, and he wrote down as dictated, and if thus done, his character could make very little difference. It is said that Mr. Harris's nawer was not put down just as he gave it, but that related only to the combustible used in the destruction of the boat, and was only a change of phracology. It is not easily seen how this answer is mportant, as the firing of the vessel is abundantly roved. It is said that these men are not entitled to uli credence, because they are accomplices.

If this was an ordinary indictment for murder is would be so. But in this case the law holds the risoner, if in the enterprize, guilty. Yet there are listinguished men in this country as well as in the other who do not hold the persons individually responsible, and the same degree of deduction should Not be made as in the former case supposed.
You will, however, make so much deduction

you think should be made on that account. The Attorney General has criticised this testim y with great skill and ingenuity, and has exhibited hatever discrepancies exist. If these men, or any of them, have sworn that there was no resistance, and that knowingly and falsely, it must detract from their credit. But one of the witnesses for the poople testified that they, in the darkness of the night, ought with each other, and might thus have been sistaken. It is said they have stated different numbers. Some have referred probably to the whole number in all the boats-others to those which reachd the Caroline. You will give this such weight as

You are to s true, captain Scars cannot say that in the darkness of night McLeod may not have been there-so Colonel McNab to the same purport. But, gentlemen, the evidence goes farther than this; some in each boat knew McLeod-they saw the men in their own boats-they did not all know him, and they did not recognize all in the boats as known to them-but hey did testify that they either knew McLeod then or have known him since-and they now state from seeing all in their respective boats, that he was not in their boats. You will apply the rule as to negative and positive testimony to these witnesses-but you should apply the rule as it exists.

·For instance-I rode with one of you to Whitesown and another of your number went there alone; ne could swear positively that I was not with him, and you could positively and fully testify to that fact. Now from each of the boats you have testimony hat McLeod was not in that boat. You will judge entlemen, of the degree of credibility to which it is entitled; but it is the prisoner's right, standing on the question of life and death, to ask its consideration at your hands, and if he was not there, award t to him then, as it belongs to him.

A correct view of the McLeod Case .- The following remarks which we find in the N. Y. Com. Advertiser of the 14th inst. are very just, and reflect credit on the writer.

"End of the Tragi-Comedy.-Well; 'the long agony is over;' McLeod is restored; and to-night legitimate sovereign. In every point of view we rejoice that the trial is over. And we are assured case. In the first place as to the destruction of the Caroline, our own private opinion is, and ever has been, in accordance with that declared so ably in the late speech of John Quincy Adams upon this subject. If the United States were right in the invasion of Florida and the capture of Pensacola, by General Jackson, many years ago-an Act that was ably vindicated by Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, and justified by the American Governmentthen, clearly were the British authorities justifiable in the destruction of the Caroline. The character of that vessel and the special service in which she was engaged were never doubtful; or, if they were, all doubts have been removed by the disclosures of this trial. She was chartered by the renegado-patriot pirates. She was cut out of the ice to be used by and for them; and she was engaged in their cuthroat vagabond service.

"In the second place, even if the act of destroyng the vessel was not justifiable, and if the killing of Durice was morder, we have never supposed for a mounent that McLend was engaged therein. Our information on the subject has always been conclusive to our own minds upon that point. McLeod was neither there, nor did he ever, on any occasion, boast of having been there. We were present at an examination of McLeod, in the prison of this cityan examination close, searching and minute-made for the information of the British Ministry; and our convictions were fully sustained. He was not there. And all that has been said in regard to his boasting on that point is a lie. His prosecution was the work of malice; and they jury which indicted him as they did, upon testimony altogether inadequate, only illustrated their own ignorance of the duties o grand inquisitors.

"In the third place, we hold that in either of the above cases, or neither, the trial of McLeod, by a state tribunal was wrong. From the moment the act of destruction was assumed by the Government of Great Britain as its own, the jurisdiction of the State of New York ceased in the premises .- From that moment the individual offence was merged in one of the higher character. The individual subject was no longer responsible. His government was : not indeed to the people or the State of New York, but to the people of the Union. And the first duty of Governor Seward should have been, on being of ficially advised that the British crown had assume the responsibility of the act, to direct the Attorney General to enter a nolle prosequi in the case, and set the accused at large. In not doing so, the state of New York has taken a large stride in the South
