From the Dublin Journal. THE GIG RACE, OR, A FULL FOR THE SILVER CUP. In the prettily situated village of Ring, within the beautiful harbor of Cove, lived an old man named Jeremiah Sullivan, who was by profession a boat-builder, and who, being uninvited in that art, justly regarded himself as one of the most important persons in the said village, if not in the county of Cork itself. It was indeed the conviction of Jerry that the man who, if any such man there were, could surpass him in the plan, the construction, or the finish of a race gig, must be a wonder, and far above the general standard of human excellence.

Jerry had one favorite apprentice, to whom he had already imparted some of the most important secrets in his profession, and to whom, at some distant period, he intended to confide the entire, as a legacy richer than the hoarded treasures of a miser; nay more valuable than even the philosopher's stone.

Early in the month of May, a gentleman ordered a race-gig from Sullivan, and from time to time sent his man Duggan to see after the progress of the work. This Duggan was held to be the crack oarsman of the harbor, and consequently prided himself a little on his reputation. He was a powerfully made though not a tall man, and his features were rather good than otherwise, but rendered displeasing from a peculiar expression of cunning about the eyes, and a perpetual sneer on his lip.

"Come now, I'm blessed," said Duggan, "that's a nate tidy craft, if I'm a judge in the last! 'I say Mister what's-your-name, isn't that purty girl the old fellow's daughter?' " "Yes, she is," replied William, with a growl; "that young woman is Miss Sullivan."

"Sartinly she is a beauty without a peer! Has she a heap of fine strapping fellows, that'll swoon after her, following of her—has she, my hearty?" "How the devil should I know! What have I to do with any one's business but my own!—and that gives me enough to mind."

Duggan made no reply, but marching round and round the half-built boat, he made several slighting observations signifying his utter contempt for the plan, as well as its execution. "Why, blow it!" said he, "look at that, I tell you there's no living use for that infernal outlandish keel. You might as well turn a lighter, as such a tub as that, in the water!"

"'Bother,' said Duggan, 'little I'd give for a score of 'em; and as for that fellow Magrath, he's a regular lubber, that isn't no more fit in a race than I'm fit to bite a piece out of this anchor at my feet!'"

"I know nothing about biting the anchor," said Collins; "but I tell you what; the four of us will try you at the regatta for the ten-pound cup!" "Done! done! my hearty! mind ye don't go back, and be forgetting yer promise!" said Duggan, with the air of one already certain of the prize.

Duggan was for a moment nearly stunned by the fall, but when in a measure recovered from its effects he rose from the ground, and eyeing the pair with a feigning expression of malice and revenge, he said, "Collins, mark my word for it, if I was to go to hell for it, I'll be into you for that fall! Mind you keep a look-out, my tidy felly! Good morning to you, Sally—good morning, purty Sally! Don't forget the race, unless you're afraid, Collins!"

As might be anticipated, the gig was disliked, and left on old Sullivan's hands. Jerry was a little peevish on the subject, and was continually regretting his unfortunate attack of the gout, which prevented himself from superintending the work, and of a consequence rendering it a model of perfection.

Outside the gate of the privileged yard were ranged tents of every variety—some few in the form of an oblong square, with a slanting roof—others like an Indian wigwam—some covered with bleached, and some with dirty canvass, while in each of them a piper or a fiddler might be heard discoursing some popular music, responded to by the clatter of some score of feet, whose movements would puzzle the eccentric genius of Fanny Elssler herself.

When William heard it, and flinging aside the plane he was then using, he rushed in to ascertain its cause. What was his amazement at beholding Sally struggling violently to release herself from the arms of the gallant Duggan, who was endeavoring in vain to snatch a kiss from the maiden's rosy mouth! "Ha! you villain!—there, take that!" said Collins, as with one fierce spring he gripped him by the throat, and flung him headlong on the floor.
