The gay land of the sun and the regions of snow,

For the love which he bore to his own native land,

When the star of the victory was blazing on high,

A banquet prepared by the sword of the slain,

And still, as he rode on his onward career,

Adding honor to honor-a host in his train,

When Jarvis came to attend his master to his opartment, he had obtained abundance of information respecting Mrs. Lindsay. She was a widow, but not a recent one; she had come to Italy with a brother in a consumption, who had died at Palermo a few weeks before: she was rich and amiable, and foundly, and, in very civilized language conveyed extremely beloved by her servants; her laments and deformity grose from an accident in her childhood; she was about forty-five years old; her late brother's name was Campbell; and her husband had been an officer in the army, with whom she had travelled across the Great Descri some years before, On which occasion she had nearly lost her night, and never quite recovered it. These particulars delivered by Jarvis with great unction, on perceiving that his master listened to them with interest-left no countenance, and he huddled up the papers on the further scope for curiosity as to their future-fellow table, while Sir Henry Mordaunt, long accustomed traveller; and the two friends, earrying the marvel-

A variety of strange feelings, inexplicable to himself, crowded on Lord Glenroy as he listened to this request, and assisted Mrs. Lindsay to enter her carringe; it was handsome, but entirely without arms, creat, or initials. The pretty Mrs. Harris placed herself by her lady's side, the old butler mounted his appropriate seat with an anxious countenance! and the little party set out on as gloomy a morning as could have been seen in any part of the world, with any thing but agreeable anticipations. At last they descended a steep hill, and at the bottom entered a narrow rocky defile, much overgrown with trees, on one side of the road.
