THE TEA ROSE. [The following is taken from an American publication entitled 'The Mayflower,' -a series of sketches by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Mrs. Stowe's scenes and characters are of a domestic nature, each exhibiting some feature in every-day life which we are apt to regard as of little or no importance. That which we extract, very simply but happily inculcates the duty of cherishing a sense of the beautiful among our lowlier neighbors- that fine feeling which rusts out and dies, because they are too hard pressed to procure it any gratification.'] There it stood in its little green vase, on a light ebony stand, in the window of the drawing room.-The rich satin curtains, with their costly fringes, swept down on either side of it, and around it glittered every rare and fanciful trifle which wealth can offer to luxury, and yet that simple rose saw the fairest of them all. So pure it looked, its white leaves just touched with that delicious creamy tint peculiar to its kind; its cup so full, so perfect; its head bending as if it were sinking away in its own richness -oh! when did man ever make any thing equal to the living perfect flower!

But the sunlight that streamed through the window revealed something fairer than the rose-a young lady reclining on an ottoman, who was thus addressed by her livelier cousin. 'I say cousin, I have been Ships between London and New York, and thinking what you are to do with your pet New York and Havre, which will enable them rose when you go to New York, ar to our to forward Emigrants and other passengers at consternation you are determined to do; you know it would be a sad pity to leave it with such a scatter-brain as I am. 'Who can it be to ? you have so few in imates here.' Oh, it is only one of my odd fancies.'

But do tell me Florence.'
