It becomes our painful duty to announce the death of Helen, the beloved wife of our much respected fel-low townsman, Mr. Charles Hughes, Druggist, in the 25th year of her age. This truly melancholy event took place after an illness of only three days, at the residence of Mr. Hughes, on Protestant Hill. Mrs. Hughes was out on Saturday last apparently quite well; in the evening she complained of all ght indisposition; on Sunday morning, honever, so little apprehensions were felt, that Mr. Hughes went to gravated type, terminated fatally about 11 o'clock on Wednesday forences, thus casting a gloom over our the same way. THE "BRITISH CONNEXION." Whenever a Colonial Tory is in distress about anything, he immediately begins to express his ap-prehensions about the perpetuity of the "British Connexion." If you attempt to press the developa veri-similitude between our institutions and those of the Mother Country, he raises a shout that would terrify a menagerie of travelling floor and tigera, and finishes by taking his outh in the most solemn manner that the more closely the institutions of the two countries are assimilated—the more strict the accordance in the practical working of Government on both sides of the Atlantic—the more the people most interested in strengthening the connexion are taught to act and think alike upon all occasions, the more danger there is of a speedy and forcible sepa ration. Now the Liberals, or References, or Con-stitutionalists, of these Colonies are simple enough to believe that the only rational ground of pride and exultation which we have in the British concexion arises from the free institutions of Britain, and the enobling sense of self-dependence, and personal security, which they forter and perpetuate. What ties of " affinity" would bind a Novascotian on the Stewinest to a Cockney on the Thames—if the said Cockney were a slave? We would despise the cockney were a slave? We would despise the cockney were a slave? We would despise the cockney on sake any autorest in him, and as to caving about a connexion with him, we should as soon wish for connexion with a leper. What would we care, if he were not quite a leper but had such a blessed kind of Responsible Government as the Tories of North America would wish to see established here; we would have no objection to trade with him, and cherish towards him the same kind of homospathic regard which we have for a Russian or a Spaniard, but as to our being very much smitten with admiration at his political saga city,-or very anxious to copy his austitutions, or inform the world that we were of his kith and kin, we rather opine that we would be in no hurry to do either. It is because that the said Cockney's ancestors and our own so bestirred themselves on the great theatry of the world, that he lives in his own house right over against the Queen, in as much security and self-dependence, as the Queen herself, that we like him, and are proud of our connexion with him.
It is because, so justous is he of his liberty, that he aill not even let her Majesty into his city, without cave usked and granted; and so shrewd and tratchful, that while he renerates his Sovereign, and would die for her, he will not bear of her doing any wrong, but holds somebody answerable for every exercise of he prerogative; it is for these reasons that we have a regard for this Cockney, even although Christopher North, snuffing the free air of the Highlands, declares that he has a greasy look. . We glory in him, because if it were suggested to him that the Queen's Advisers should be selected from all parties, and not from spine one, united by common sentiment and common principles, he would laugh in her Majesty's face—because, if it were proposed to him to pass over all the prominent Statesmen, in both branches, and make Rothschild a Cabinet Minister, he would gd.into convulsions-because, if it were told him that a minister once in. must remain in the Cabinet whether he approved of the policy and appointments of the Government, or not, for fear he might be charged with treason, he would knock his informant

Three-millions and a half of moury were recently spent in Canada, to decide the question of whether two or three men in each Province should have seals in the Eesecutive Council instead of two or three others-our British brethren on the other wide of the water having no more real interest in the CHAM matter, than they had in the contest between Joe viz :-Cope and Francis Paul, for the chiefrainship of the Micmacs, last winter. "British Constaion," originally, had nothing to do with these risalries, till the Prerogative was thrust in to aid one set of British subjects to triumply over another set, -- and then, the latter began, very naturally, to quarrel with the Prerogative, and the 'connexion' became evidengered. Lord Falkland thought proper to appoint one Nora-scotian to his Council, and three others did not choose to defend the appointment, and walked out. What had our allegiance—the prerogative, and British connexion, to do with all this I Why, if we had all been smothered in a snow-drift, with the Governor underneath, the British connexion would not have been endangered. Is it not grass folly, then, for one set of Colonists to be continually defaming all the others, with whom they don't happen to sgree; and still more absurd when Governors lead the van in charging treason upon one potton of her Majesty's subjects, for the advantage of that other portion, of whom Lord Sydenham jocoset said, that their exuberant loyalty was the greatest lifficulty be had to contend with.
