

of two solitary instances—not a man left, and Mr. Bidwell himself was the first to compliment us on our independence. Then again, the expiration of the half year was to be the hour of death—the hour came, we lost twenty subscribers and gained forty. "Stop till the elections are over," was the next cry, "and then look out." The elections are over, and here we are, alive and kicking!—Bah! While we can command the largest circulation of any paper in the Midland District, so long shall we obtain a good advertising patronage; and so long as we take ordinary pains to please our readers, and remain true to the principles we profess, so long will they remain true to us—and no longer.

But to return to the subject of the Tuesday's Whig appearing on Wednesday. What can we poor bodies do! We keep no more cats than catch mice, and it often happens, that just as we have made sure of the paper's coming out in good season, in comes a customer with a handbill as long as his arm, who under threat of taking his work to another office, compels us to neglect the public service and take off our best hand to attend to him. This is no justification—it is merely an excuse. Methinks some cynic exclaims, "what has all this rignarole to do with your trip to Toronto." Every thing sweet critic—for unless we are allowed to digress and regress, jump upon what hobby horse we like, and gallop whither we list, we shall never progress in this journey of ours, commenced solely and especially for your entertainment. If you don't know when you are well off, we do.

But Tuesday or Wednesday, where did we leave off, we ask?—We call to mind.—We had barely got on board the steambot, moored safely at Drummond's Wharf. This was about six o'clock in the evening, on the sixth inst. and the third bell was ringing. One of the most exciting scenes in a quiet Canadian town or village is the arrival or departure of a large steambot. The crowds of passengers anxious to get on shore, the crowds of men of business and of idlers anxious to get on board, the shipping and unshipping of goods and luggage, the carters attending with their teams, the runners from the various hotels attending with their impertinent officiousness, the noise by blowing off steam, the exclamations, vociferations and outcries of the happy and disappointed—together joined, form a scene of tumult and rudeness, to be surpassed only in Bedlam or Billingsgate. There was the usual proportion of bustle and business in the St. George's departure from Kingston on this memorable occasion; the last bell had done ringing, the last rope was cast off, the engine had already made several revolutions, when a piteous cry was heard from the wharf. It proceeded from a middle aged man, evidently from the land of cockaigne, loaded with a basket of provisions and a suspicious looking bottle under his arm, who though almost exhausted by over exertion, still made shift to bawl with all his remaining force—"Stop the engine, I want to come on board." "Too late," was the pilot's laconic reply. "But my wife's on board," shouted the Londoner. "You must follow her," answered the pilot. "I ain't got no money, my wife keeps all the cash," was the desponding response of the unfortunate wight. There was no withstanding this appeal, so the Captain taking compassion upon his forlorn condition, put back the vessel and took the applicant from the wharf, who the moment he got on board, received a lesson of another kind from his meek helpmate, rendering it highly problematical whether or not, a benefit had been conferred upon him by his admission.

When a vessel leaves port, it is fashionable for all passengers, who aspire to be 'comme il faut,' to be seen pacing with rapid strides, its promenade or quarter deck, as the case may be. 'Out of the fashion, out of the world' is a maxim as applicable to the woods and wilds of Canada, as to the salons of Paris, or the drawing rooms of London. No wonder then, that we speedily found ourselves ambulating by the side of a gouty though intelligent fellow traveller, on the deck of the St. George. Amusing ourselves by responding to his interrogatories, time insensibly passed, and the shades of night fell thickly while the swift vessel dashing the billows from her bow, and cleaving the troubled lake, had already made the town loom in the distance like a mighty monster of the imagination. Before the receding shores were totally obscured by darkness, the eye of the stranger rested for a few seconds upon the lofty Penitentiary, which embosomed in the woods like the horrid Upas Tree, is doomed to spread its baneful influence over the surrounding country. Ten minutes put him in possession of the facts of this nefarious scheme to annihilate the wealth and commerce of the second town of the province, and no sooner was the slight narration ended, than abruptly ending the conversation, he hobbled down the stairway, exclaiming as he went, "be these your Canada tricks, I'm for the States."

Ill fated Kingston as if fire and pestilence were not deemed sufficient scourges, its most honored children have joined to entail upon these a perpetual curse. The men whom that sentence to guard thy interests in the councils of the province, can find no better method of testifying their gratitude, than by terming thy inhabitants "RABBLE," and making them, after driving away thy best mechanics—the very bone and sinew of thy strength—the receptacle and refuge of all the vagabonds, thieves, and cut throats of the province, to be hereafter discharged from that den of iniquity in thy vicinity!

Talking of the Penitentiary puts us in mind to call over the cable the present management thereof. £12,500 have been expended in erecting a huge unsightly and unfinished wing of an immense building. Where the money has gone, the devil or the Commissioners only know, but gone it is, and at this present moment, there is a Governor with £200 salary and et cetera, a superintendent (a Yankee of course) with £250, and his deputy with £250 a year (both with et cetera) entailed upon them—doing nothing but sucking their thumbs & drawing their wages. We might pass over the Governor and his deputy, because the former deserves some recompense for his meritorious services, and the latter left a good business to obey the call of the Commissioners; but why keep that lubberly Yankee, to drink the heart's blood of the province—why not pack him off to reap in other lands the reward of others' ingenuity? Why? Because the simple Commissioners who could find no Englishman, Scotchman, Irishman or Canadian, sufficiently competent to build a jail, chose to engage with this land lubber for three years certain.

Then there are the Commissioners for building this rogues' palace. Messrs. Macaulay, Smith, and Thomson were the three originally appointed. The latter is deceased, the second is made Governor, and the former is consequently lord and master of the erections, sole cock of the walk; unless indeed his authority be superseded by the late appointment of the Inspectors. Should this last idea be realized, we have no more to say, but should it not, what must the world think of that Executive, which would leave the expenditure of the Provincial money to one man, however high that man's character for integrity may stand? We would willingly go on with our remarks, but the supper bell is ringing, and editors like other folks must eat.

"For lips, though blooming, must still be fed," "And not e'en love can live on flowers."

While we are indulging in the dainties of a Canadian tea table, we'll take a bird's eye view of our fellow passengers. Were it not that some absurd folks have an objection to be shown off in the columns of a newspaper, we might try to be fanciful in the description; as it is, we must be concise. Two Scottish gentlemen with their sisters, a young man from London, our late companion, a half pay officer, a gentleman from Montreal, another from Perth with his wife, a merchant returning to Niagara, a brother chip from Kingston, the ship's officers and our doughty self comprised the entire company. The un-English and un-social habit of driving the ladies into a cabin by themselves, is a Canadian custom, "more honored in the breach than in the observance," so after tea the ladies vanished, and the gentlemen having nothing better to do, sat down to cards and conversation; one by one, retiring to rest, ourselves among the last, where undisturbed by the motion of the boat, which like a fiery war-horse, was snorting, prancing and kicking, we sunk into the arms of Murphy.

The blunder made by Black in the 5th move affects the game. White appears extremely cautious, and ventures no attack. The superiority of his position must, with ordinary play, win the game.
Last Evening, Mr. Otto Rotton gave his promised Lecture on Hydrogen and Oxygen Gases at Mr. R. Jennings's School Room. The lecture was well attended, and the lecturer did his subjects ample justice. From the want of good apparatus, many of the experiments failed, but a sufficient number succeeded to satisfy the audience, who repeatedly testified their approbation. At the conclusion of the Lecture the Nitrous Oxide was inhaled by a few of the visitors, and the usual exhilarating and ludicrous effects were produced. One young man continued under its operation several minutes, so long indeed, that most persons were of opinion that it was prolonged intentionally, to allow certain brutal political expressions to escape, which decency might not tolerate under less excitement.

The Provincial Parliament has been further prorogued from the 25th inst. to 22nd December, not then to meet for the despatch of public business. By this prorogation, the meeting of Parliament will most probably be postponed until the end of January.

Mr. Thomas Nicholls, one of the town constables, lately arrested and lodged in jail a man named Henry Elston, on suspicion of stealing a quantity of tools from Messrs. Turpin & Stecks, Joiners, Yonge-st. Toronto.

An accident occurred on board the Steamboat Thomas M'Kay at Bytown, on the 17th inst. In returning from Mr. M'Kay's Mills, to the place where the steamboat now lies moored outside the Locks, one of the hands by name Charles Flood, fell overboard, and before assistance could be procured, unfortunately sunk to rise no more. His remains were found the next day.

To the Editor of the British Whig.
DEAR DOCTOR,—I enclose you a few lines from a Back-Woodman, as the Editor of the Belleville paper in his last number talks about depriving us of our water works, which please insert.

In haste, Yours truly,
TIMOTHY TOUCH 'EM UP.
River Trent, 20th Nov. 1834.
Come listen now good people all
For my heart with grief is rent,—
When I think that how the Belleville folks
Will take away the Trent.

Now what will then become of us
And where shall we be sent,
If the Belleville folks do us wrong
And take away the Trent?
Our little fishes that have swimm'd
And their lives and loves have spent,
Most surely to the pot must go,
When they take away the Trent.

Our ducks who have both ducked and dived
'Till their legs and wings are bent,
Will have no place to rest their bums
When they take away the Trent.

The geese and eke the loons also
Will find their time mispent,
In learning how to swim, if folks
Do take away the Trent.

Our little grinders and our big
With our good mud content,
Must to the Belleville grinders go
When they take away the Trent.

Our washerwomen and our maids
On cleanliness intent,
Must to their dirty shifts be left
If folks take away the Trent.

Our lumberers too, a hardy race,
Won't have a pleasant scent,
Because they can't their faces wash
When folks take away the Trent.
