EXTRAORDINARY ROBBERY .- A robbery was committed a few days since under very singular circumstances at the shop of Mr. Capell, a pawnbroker in Old Street. A handsome coat, worth three guineas, had been exposed for sale; but afterwards, upon examination of the different pledges that had been received in the course of the day, the identical coat was found amongst them, pawned for £1. The shopman remembered having received it in pledge from a smart looking young man in the course of the afternoon. Upon inquiry, it was ascertained from an old man who keeps an apple-stall hard by, that he had about the same time observed three young men standing about the shop door, but they appeared to him so much of gentlemen that he had no suspicion of any thing wrong. It appeared clear, however, that they were some of the "Swell Mob," who having stolen the coat at the door, immediately carried it into one of the side-boxes to borrow a sovereign upon it from the pawnbroker himself, entitled, in cant phrase, their "uncle."

Francis said he could not view the matter in this light, and again repeated that he must be allowed to take his own course. He further added that he did not believe that the present or any other government, now the reform bill had passed, could endanger the liberties of the country; and he considered that measure, not as it was in cant phraseology represented, a means to an end, but an end, and a very great end too. In answer to a statement by one of the gentlemen, that a requisition, calling upon him to resign, was in course of signature, he said, "Very well, let them send it to me, with their reasons, and I will give the best answer I can; but I will not allow this place to be made a parliament to discuss subjects which would require a week's debate." The gentlemen then withdrew.

> You have, no doubt, seen a rumour about the condition of Her Majesty in relation to a much-to-bedesired event," as the cant of the Morning Post, and fashionable world had it. Now this alleged condition was a mere speculation of the Toties, to get up simpathy in her Majesty's favour, her popularity having suffered of late, owing to her marked leaning towards the Tories. The Spec. did not answer, however. sworn the King had been cheated-that the Qeen had not been to Germany for nothing, and so forth Ribald jokes, songs, and caricatures, bearing allusion to the "event" were heard and seen at the corner of every street; so that at last the "rumour" was contradicted. Thus all that the Tories have done is, they have injured the reputation of an innocent person. But they care not much for that; they are a selfish crew and quite unscrupulous as to the means by which they attain their ends.
