To say that this is a reading age, implies a desire for instruction, and it the means to graifly that desire. On the first point, all are agreed; on the second, there is diversity both of opinion and of practice. We have ly all subjects, which have severally their clarges of fireders and supportance of the books, the people, in large numbers, in all parts of our great republic, crave the possession of the books themselves, and details, beyond more passing allusion, of the progress of discovery in art and eclence.—But though it be easy to ascertain and express their wants, it is not so easy to gratify that desire.

Expense, distance from the emporium of literature engreeous occupations which prevent personal application or even measures to libraries and booksellers, are so many causes to keep people away from the feast of reason, and the enjoyment of the covered literary aliment. It is the alm of the publishers of the Library to obviate these difficulties, and to enable every individued, at a small cost and without any personal effort, to obtain for his own use and that of his favored friends or family, valuable works, complete, on all the branches of useful and popular literature, and that in a form well adapted to the comfort of the reader.

The charm of variety, as far as it is compatible with morality and good taste, will be held constantly in view in conducting the Library, to fill the pages of which the current literature of Great Britain, in all it vairous departments of Biography, History, Travels, Novels and Poetry, shall be freely put under contribution. With, perchaser, occusional exceptions, it is intended to give entire the work which shall be selected for publication. When circumstances authorize the measure, recourse will be had to the literary stores of Continental Europe, and translations made from French, Italian, or German, as the case may be.

Whilst the body of the work will be a reprint, or at times a translation of entire volumes, the cover will exhibit the miscellaneous character of a Magazine, and consist of sketchs of men and things, and notices of novelties in literature and the arts, throughout the civilized world. A full and regular supply of the literary monthly and hebdomadal Journals of Great Britain and Ireland, in addition to home periodicals of similar character, cannot fall to provide ample materials for this part of our work.

The resources and extensive correspondence of the publishers, are the best guarantee for the continuance of the enterprise in which they are now about to embark, as well as for the abundance of the materials to give it value in the eyes of the public. As for as judicious selection and arrangement are concerned, readers will, it is hoped, have reason to be fully satisfied, as the editor of the Library is not a stranger to them, but has more than once obtained their favorable surages for his past literary efforts.

MISCELLANY.

FOR THE BRITISH WHIG. TO EMMELINE. Can a heart that is bursting with grief, Find ease by relating its woe? Can my bosom c'er hope for relief, While my sorrows continue to flow ? Alis! tho' no succour be near. From sighing I cannot refrain; And a tear still enforcing a tear,

My eye-lids incossantly strain.

O! cou'd I these torments now quit! Cou'd I chase but her form from my mind! But why shou'd I wish to forget That once she was gentle and kind? That late in the play-day of youth. To my nonage should be so severe, To cause me to love her with truth! To cause me, alas! to despair!

Oh! whence are the moments of bliss We spent where the clantines grow? Or where the sweet innocent kiss, She then was so kind to bestow ? Gone, gone-I shall prove them no more, With my blossoms of hope ere they fled; That hope I was fond to adore! Now blasted, now wither'd, and dead.

Had she never permitted my praise, When reclin'd on her bosom I hung: Had she never been fond of my lays, Had she never applauded my song: O! then had my heart been at rest, Which now must for ever endure, An anguish which can't be exprest! An anguish she only can cure. Kingston Aug. 21.

TAKING UP THE CROSS.

Jesus, I my cross have taken, All to leave, and follow theo; Naked, poor despised, forsaken; Thou, from hence, my all shalt be-Perish every fond ambition, All I've sought, or hoped, or known, Yet how rich is my condition, God and heaven are still my own !

Let the world despise and leave me; They have left my Savior too: Human hearts and looks deceive me-Thou art not, like them, untrue; And whilst thou shalt smile upon me, God of wisdom, love, and might, Foes may hate, and friends disown me; Show thy face and all is bright.

Go, then, earthly fame and treasure, Come, disaster, scorn and pain In thy service pain is pleasure, With thy favor loss is gain. I have call'd thee Abba, Father, I have set my heart on thee; Storms may howl, and clouds may gather, All must work for good to me.

Man may trouble and distress me, "Twill but drive me to thy breast; Life with trials hard may press me, Heaven will bring mo sweeter rest. Ch! 'tis not in grief to harm me, While thy love is left to me; Oh! 'twere not in joy to charm me, Were that joy unmix'd with thee. Soul, then know thy full salvation,

Rise o'er sin, and fear, and care; Joy to find, in every station, Something still to do or bear. Think what spirit dwells within thee; Think what Fathers smiles are thine; Think that Jesus died to win thee; Child of heaven, canst thou repine? Haste thee on from grace to glory, Arm'd by faith, and wing'd by prayer, Heaven's eternal days before thee; God's own hand shall guide thee there. Soon shall close thy earthly mission, Soon shall pass thy pilgrim days, Hope shall change to glad fruition, Faith to sight, and prayer to praise.

From the London Age. TO MISS FANNY KEMBLE. Who, poor and almost penniless, Driven to the stage by dire distress, Sought succour from the indulgent Press ?

My Fanny I Who, when that Press with loud acclaim, In pity wrote her into fame, Repaid them with an odious name?

My Fanny ! Who, welcomed in a foreign land, By patrons, friends-all heart and hand-With ridicule their friendship scann'd?

My Panny t Who, in a journal none defend, Proves by the "Bug," so coarsely penn'd, How she has "hum-bugg'd" every friend?

My Panny !

Correspondence of the Commercial Advertiser. CHICAGO, June 20th, 1835.

Dear Sir-You have been already made acquainted with our peregrinations in pursuit of the far west, up to our Departure from Mackinaw-our next stopping place was at fort Howard, a military post, situated at the mouth of the Fox river, at the southern extremity of Green Bay. This is a place of considerable importance, and promises to be the site of a flourishing town. The Fox river is navigable for boats within a short distance of Winnebago, from which place a portage of one mile separates it from the navigable waters of the Ouisconsin. The territory around Green Bay is rapidly filling up, and at this moment the settlement at fort Howard has two churches, two comfortable hotels seven stores well stocked, and about fifty dwelling houses. The river is settled for a dozen miles on each side by whites; and the Stockbridge and Oneida tribes of Indians, many of which have farms well cultivated, occupy for some distance above. The climate is said to be severe, but judging from our own experience, we should consider it warm, as the thermometer stood (13th of June,) at 980, and green We received a considerable accession to our numbers at this place, some of them speculators bound to Chicago, and others travellers going east. Leaving fort Howard, we bent our course directly for Chicago-our passage up the bay was delightful, & we were constantly interested and amused by watching the Indians sweeping along in their light canoes or examining the broken outline of the coast covered with trees, and indented by bays. The next morning found us in lake Michigan with a stiff breeze cutting our way through a dense fog; towards evening the breeze increased, the sea rose, and before midnight, crockery smashing, boxes shifting, chairs tumbling, pigs squealing, sheep bleating-every thing in motion gave evidence of a strong wind-we shipped a sea into our cabin windows. which sent our passengers dripping upon deck, and afforcied one of our friends (a nervous little fellow) an opportunity of trying his life preserver, had he not previously placed himself, life preservour and all, on the stairs, half way up the gangway, with his umbrella spread that he might use it as a sail in case of emergency; but though the sea was running high there was no manner of danger, and even the ladies were perfectly tranquil. We arrived at Chicago in the morning, but the wind continued so strong that scarce a dozen of us dared to go on shore; but the old adage-it is an ill wind that blows no one luckproved true on this occasion. Arriving on shore I found the streets crowded, the hotels spilling over, and travellers arriving from east, west, north and south, some on horseback, some in waggons, some in boats. The village was literally crowded, and the universal cry was "Where can I lodge?" After running too and fro through the place for near an hour, knocking at every door, and inquiring of every way farer, I began to despair and tremble lest I should not find even a place under shelter to stand up in. Just at this moment, I met a man, who informed me that he knew of one house, and but one, where he could possibly obtain accommodations, but that it was some distance from the centre of the village; comfortable quarters any where was a consideration not to be neglected, and on examination I found them every thing that could be desired. The rest of our company were not so well provided thin, and through summe law of them by albering three in a bed, considered themselves comfortably loged, the majority were forced to wrap themselves in their cloaks and hug an oak plank. The Saginash parlor the next morning was strewed with seventeen proned of our friends were obliged to travel half a mile to obtain a similar privilege. It was Sunday, and the streets exhibited a spectacle, both novel and revolting to an individual educated in the land of steady habits. The whole village seemed to be in motion—the streets were literally alive-men, in platoons, were promenading themknots of individuals occupied the corners the barrooms were crowded. Every thing bore evidence of a foul conspiracy, but it was a conspiracy against the purse and not against our liberty. Speculation was in every one's mouth-here was a man talking eloquently upon the qualities of his horse-there another, invoking all the saints to witness, that land he bought yesterday for 100 dollars, was cheap to-day at a thousound. Yonder tall, dark-looking figure with a map in his hand is pointing out to a couple of city speculators, the position of their water-lots (with privilege of docking out) which they bought, a great

Chicago is situated about fifteen miles from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan, on a river of the same name, which, at the distance of a mile from the lake, divides into two branches-known as the north and south forks-both of which are navigable for the largest size of lake craft to the distance of six miles from their confluence. Along these & the main stream the village is built.

bargain, in New-York.

It consists of about five hundred small wooden buildings-fifty stores and warehouses (one of which is brick)—seven hotels—two or three boarding houses-a small methodist church, and a presbyterian lecture room. The land in the vicinity is a dead plain, nearly on a level with the river, with a clay bottom, covered by a rich dark soil, soft and spongy. so that the streets are cut up into deep sloughs at all seasons, and during rains, are in many places absolutely impassable. Side walks have not come into fashion; & the pedestrian, whether man or beast, must splash through the same mireunprotected either by hills or trees-The winds here hold an eternal jubilee, occasionally assisted by the sharp shooting lightning and deep rolling thunder. We have been obliged to gather round the fire to keep ourselves comfortable, even at so late a season as this, and last night came a frost, which has materially injured vegetation. This is as favorable an account as I can honestly give of Chicago—It is
