MANY HAPPY RETURNS OF THE DAY. BY ELIZA COOK.

Merry words, merry words! ye come bursting around Telling all that affection can say; Tis the music of heart-cords that dwells in " Many happy returns of the day." [sound, The red check of the child is more rich in its glow, And the bright eye more swift in its ruy, When his mates hail his birth in their holiday mirth And drink " Hoppy returns of the day," The old man may smile, while he listens, and feel He hath little time longer to stay; Still he liketh to hear from the lips that are dear,

" Many happy returns of the day."

Though Misfortune is nigh, let the kind words float And something of Hope will spring up, [by, That the hand of the Future may drain off the gall, ment. And some nectar drops yet fill our cup, If we bask in content, while another short year Is recorded with eloquent bliss,

How we prize the fond wishes, all gladly sincere, That come round with the soul-pledging kiss, Oh! our place in the world will be chilly and drear, its course. With a view to prevent either sentence of death upon both prisoners, and When our natal-tide passes away, Without one to remember or breathe in our ear,

" Many happy returns of the day." There are moments when memory cruelly brings The grim spectres of joy back again, When sorrow malignantly sharpens her stings Till we quiver and bleed with the pain; And the spirit will groan in such moments as this, When our loudly-hailed birthday shall fall, But among the warm greetings there's one that we

And that one was the dearest of all. What would we not give if the grave could restore The dear form it hath wrested away, If the voice of that lost one could wish us once more " Many bappy returns of the day."

Till they burn in the crucible breast, With an increase and might that we knew not the Of our smouldering feelings pussessed; [light And that flame will be vividly flashing out thus When we welcome returns of the time That gave some loved beings to life and to us,

The sweet bells in mortality's chine, Then a garland, a bumper, a dance, and a feast, Let the natal-day come when it may, Be it autumn or spring, a gay chorus we'll sing-" Many happy returns of the day."
