

coucil of war which was held at the baths of Sjuk Sou (this was probably early in September). It proposed that the whole army should make a grand attack upon the mountaineers; but many of the officers asserted that their men could not be trusted, and it was finally determined that overtures should be made to Schamli Bey for an armistice. Schamli who was rather short of provisions consented to this, on condition that, during the interruption of hostilities the Russians should furnish his camp with food; and on these terms an armistice was concluded up to the day of Kassim (7th November), when the Dagestani intend to renew the war with augmented vigor. A letter from that part of the world states that the losses of the Russians, between killed, wounded and missing, amount to 60,000 men; whilst those of the mountaineers amounted to 12,000. This may possibly be true; but had the numbers been more moderate, one would have been more likely to give credit to the assertion. Certain it is that the forces of Russia have been concentrated in the neighborhood of Daghestan. In fact the lines of the Kubans are now so badly guarded, that the Circassians of Abazk and Carabda are constantly crossing the borders, attacking the Russian villages, and bearing off rich spoils in slaves, horses, cattle, sheep, and other property.

S Y R I A .

Our letters from Beyrouth reach down to the 26th of Oct. From Mount Lebanon and Damascus there is no intelligence of moment, save that in the former district the mountaineers show a total indifference to the forthcoming meetings between the Ottoman authorities and the deputies from the Maronites and Druzes. Tranquillity prevails at the camp of the Seraskier, at Oulz, and likewise at Aleppo, but Jaffa and Sydda have been the scene of bloodshed, having been entered by the notorious Sheik Abu Gasi, who massacred the Governors of both places. Troops, (which continue to arrive at Beyrouth from Constantinople) have been sent in the direction of Sidon and Jaffa in steamers. The arms distributed by the allied powers have been the cause of much mischief, and until the Sultan carries out his determination to disarm the population, the country will never be in any other than a most deplorable state of anarchy. The English frigate Tyne, and the French Corvete, Dideron, have left Beyrouth for Jaffa.

Original Poetry.

For the British Whig.

A NEW SONG ABOUT LOVE.

ST JAMES SHEPPARD, THAT AGT., GRENADA, W. I.
"Amor et melle et selle est secundissimum." Love—what a sheer little, queer little lad he is? Vexing, perplexing us morning and night; One time, how merry,—another how sad he is. Still throwing gall in the cup of delight: His rule is unbound'd, for king, peer and peasant, Acknowledge allegiance, and tribute-mint pay; And even philosophes too, think pleasant, To let the sky God have it all his own way.

Love—what a sheer little, queer little lad he is. Go seek for young Love—see he's hid in the flower, Which Emma unconsciously puts in her breast! Alas for the maiden!—she'll soon feel the power Of the blind little deity, snugly at rest;

Bang goes the bow—why 'tis Cupid's own dart, it is; Laughing, he flies to his mother away:

But beautiful Emma soon finds that her heart is Wounded by Cupid—the ardor so gay!

Love, what a sheer little, sheer little lad he is.

Now, for the first time, she feels the presentiment:

She knows not yet what,—but conjectures it's sentiment;

Thea drops the tear from her soft beamling eye.

Dame Hymen approaches with " What is the matter, dear?"

Sure to you'll your feelings impart."

"Alas," cries the maidie, "I feel such a flutter here."

"Love—oh 'tis love who has wounded my heart!"

Love—what a sheer little, queer little lad he is.

In the region of beauty, king Love is a reveller, " Blushing fifteen," and thronseur, in his train;

Three pride is quite humble—for Cupid's a beelster;

E'en would avare signs not for gain!

High, low, high and poor—vice and vice united—

The hero and coward alike feel the sting;

In fact, the whole world, tormented—delighted,

Acknowledges Love is a beautiful thing.

Love—what a sheer little, queer little lad he is.

For the British Whig.

SESSION RHYMES.

BY F U Z .

NO. VI.

What a knowing dog is our reporter! He has learned the art of quaffing claret and champagne in less than three weeks—a delicacy he couldn't even get a smell at in Squigerville. As he is, either a "lucky one" he intends purchasing a few tickets for the approaching "Raffle," in hopes of winning the Hyena, which he talks of pinning upon his "Elvira," should he not be able to procure for her the far-famed Poodle. He can "throw stones"—that's evident—but whether he can hit his man or not, in this instance, is as yet, a mystery: he has hit his man, I know, very frequently.

Secret Chamber,

Squigerville, 24th Dec., 1844.

SECOND EPISTLE.

now our reporter to see SLYSTERS.

Ask—" The Doctor and his dons."

Dear Bob, queer Bob, I wish we had you here, Bob,

You're such a nervous little soul, I think you'd die for fear, Bob;

It's not enough with clubs and stones to rid one of their breath, Bob;

Their strange outlandish gibberish would frighten you to death, Bob;

Say, Bob! pray, Bob, that I may live my day Bob,—

When the Members take their holidays I'll surely steal away, Bob,

Dear, Bob, queer Bob.

Kind Bob, mind Bob, you'll very likely find, Bob, That, if the Bees should leave their hive, I'll hard- ly stay behind, Bob;

I'll bring some curiosities, that may amuse you all, Bob,

I'd steal our Madam's "poodle," but 'twould likely raise a squall, Bob,

Because the little deer is said to be almost a shrew, Bob,

But, as I havn't seen it yet, I cannot say lis- so, Bob.

Kind Bob, mind Bob,

Now, Bob, I trow, Bob, you'll likely raise a row, Bob,

If I shouldn't bring you something else instead of that 'bow wow,' Bob;

I'll pledge my word if Madam L. don't mind what

I'll pick the little poodle up, when they are dining out, Bob.

Elvira told me when I left, not to return again, Bob,

Unless I stole this wondrous pet from Madam L., Bob.

Now Bob, I trow, Bob.

So, Bob, so, Bob, you see it's all "no go," Bob,

If I don't bring a poodle up almost as white as snow, Bob,

I'll make Elvira believe it is the very one she craves, Bob,—

You know that lovers often play the part of ar- rant knaves, Bob;

Those pretty maids with coaxing eyes, as bright as any gem, Bob,

Would make us do an hundred things we wouldn't but for them, Bob.

So, Bob, so, Bob.

Dear Bob, dear Bob, I'd think it quite severe, Bob,

If you insist that I should spend my holidays down here, Bob;

The Members have made up their minds to have a Christmas stroll, Bob,—

I could live without them here—you needn't think it ill, Bob,

They've found that I have quite a taste for claret and champagne, Bob,

So there's no doubt at all we will shortly meet again, Bob.

Dear Bob, dear Bob.

Facts and Scraps, original and select.

A CARD.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON, Graduate of the Royal College of Physicians of the Island of Barataria, and late Physician in Ordinary to certain of its inhabitants, begs leave to tender to the ladies and gentlemen of Kingston the usual compliments of the season, and to thank them for the patronage they have hitherto extended to him.

Having just finished the perusal of the last number of "Brutus' Retrospect," and obtained therefrom a thorough knowledge of the latest improvements in Medicine and Surgery, by which he considers himself much in advance of his professional brethren, Dr. FOUNA-BALLON flatters himself that the information he has derived from the work alluded to, coupled with his great experience on the Island of Barataria, will enable him to wage successful war against all those bodily ailments that sinful flesh is heir to. He therefore strongly urges upon the people of the good Town of Kingston an increased expansion to him of their patronage,—confident that the laudatory certificate of certain inhabitants of Barataria, which was published by him on his first appearance in this Town, will not be found to have been unmerited.

DOCTOR FOUNA-BALLON would draw attention to one very important fact not mentioned in the Glasgow Constitution: in the certificate alluded to, viz., that previous to his having practised on the Island of Barataria, he had enjoyed very extensive practice in the South Sea Islands, and more particularly in the Country of Houynhnam. From Dr. FOUNA-BALLON's long residence among the Yahoos of that country, he has acquired much insight into their manners, customs, and diseases, and he therefore confidently looks to the Yahoo portion of the inhabitants of Kingston for an appreciation of his virtues.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.

Dr. FOUNA-BALLON begs to inform his patients that he is perfectly satisfied to give them his opinions regarding the nature and treatment of diseases; and he trusts that his high literary polish, great medical erudition, and long experience, will be a sufficient guarantee that the medical work he is about to publish will meet their approbation. He solicits a continuance of the esteem of the Profession, and takes this opportunity to inform them that he will be guided in his future professional career, as he has been in his former, viz., by a full determination not to worm himself into practice by trumpeting his own praise, or by attempting to undermine his professional brethren.</p