Selected Poetry. THE STATESMAN'S DREAM. A TALE FOR HER JAMES GRAHAM. From Punch.

It chanced that on a night, of late, Exhausted with a long debate, To bed a Statesman went;

And then they went before the Board, Who on their heads reproaches pour'd, For busy, worthless folk;

THE JARRING look his slumber broke, And to reality he woke. A wren and drowsy bed;

CASTLE, love do you know what next Sunday is? 'No! you don't! Well was there ever such a strange man!

CASTLE, love do you know what next Sunday is? 'No! you don't! Well was there ever such a strange man!

CASTLE, love do you know what next Sunday is? 'No! you don't! Well was there ever such a strange man!

"As I say, Caudle, it's only a proper compliment that a man owes to his wife to keep his wedding-day. It's as much as to say to the whole world—There if I had to marry again, my blessed wife's the only woman I'd choose!"

"But we won't quarrel, Caudle. No; you don't mean anything, I know. We'll have this little dinner, eh? Just a few friends?"

"And now, Caudle, what shall we have for dinner? No—we won't talk of it tomorrow; we'll talk of it now, and then it will be off my mind. I should like something particular—something out of the way—just to show that we thought the day something. I should like—Mr. Caudle, you're not a sleep! What do I want?"

"Why you know I want to settle about the dinner—Have you I like I No; as it's your fancy to keep the day, it's only right that I should try to please you. We never had one, Caudle; so what do you think of a haunch of venison? What do you say? Nonsense; mutton will do! Ha! that shows what you think of your wife: I dare say it was with any of your pothouse companions—you'd have no objection to venison. I say it—what do you mutter?"

"Let it be venison! Very well. And now about the fish? What do you think of a nice turbot? No, Mr. Caudle; brill won't do—it shall be turbot, or there shall't be any fish at all, Oh, what a mean man you are, Caudle! Shall it be turbot? Very well. And now about the soup—now Caudle, don't swear at the soup in that manner; you know there must be soup. Well, once in a way, and just to show our friends how happy we've been, we'll have some real turtle. No you won't, you'll have nothing but mock? Then, Mr. Caudle, you may sit at the table by yourself. Mock turtle on a wedding-day! was there ever such an insult? What do you say? Let it be real then for once! Ha, Caudle! as I say you were a very different person fourteen years ago."

"And Caudle, you'll look after the venison? There's a place I know somewhere in the City, where you get it beautiful! You'll look to it? Very well. And now who shall we invite? Who I like? Now, you know Caudle, that's no sense; because I only like him whom you like. I suppose the Prettyman's must come? But understand, Caudle, I don't have Miss Prettyman; I'm not going to have any more of her. I don't appear on my own roof! If she comes, don't appear at the table. What do you say?—Very well? Very well be it, then."

"And now, Caudle, you'll not forget the venison? A haunch you know a nice haunch, And you'll not forget the venison?—"

"Three times did I fall off to sleep," says Caudle, "and three times did my wife nudge me with her elbow, exclaiming, 'You'll not forget the venison? At last I got into a sound slumber, and dream I was a pot of currant-jelly.'"

FROM PUNCH. CAMBRIDGE'S ENGLISH SPEAKER. The frequency of the Duke of Cambridge's appearance at public dinners, where he of course occupies the chair, and is called upon to speak very often, has the effect of making his Royal Highness a perfect master of the arts of eloquence.

It is, we believe, the intention of the Duke of Cambridge to publish a new "English Speaker," including a number of after-dinner orations applicable to all sorts and descriptions of charitable purposes. The collection will include several of the Duke's own powerful bursts of eloquence, of which we are happy to have the privilege of giving a few specimens.
