From the Toronto Colonist.

An inquiry was held on Saturday afternoon, at the Farmer's Inn. Market Square, before George Duggan, Esq., one of the city coroners, on the body of one Richard Walker, known in this city as Dr. Walker.

A respectable jucy attended, and Mr. John Diamond having been appointed foreman, they proceeded to view the body, in an upper room, which presented a heart-rending spectacle .-The deceased was, in life, a man above the middle height; the body now lay with the bones nearly protruding through the skin. So much attenuated was the deceased, that the arm was scarcely larger in elecumference, than that of an infant twelve month; old, and the thigh not larger than the larger part of the tice to the good things prepared for the opension. arm in health.

Richard Duggan .- I went into the room this morning, about half-past seven, where deceased lay; I laid my hand upon him and found he was dead. He has slent here about four nights.
