Give me three grains of corn mother, Only three grains of corn, It will keep the little life I have Till the coming of the morn. I am dying of hunger and cold, mother; Dying of hunger and cold, And half the agony of such a death, My lips have never told.

It has gnawed like a wolf at my heart mother, A wolf that is herce for blood, All the livelong day, and the night beside, Godwing for lack of food. I dreamed of bread in my sleep, mother, And the sight was Leaven to see ; I woke with an eager, famishing lip, But you had no bread for me.

How could I look to you, mother, How could I look to you, For bread to give your starving boy. When you are starying toe? For I read the famine in your check And in your eye so wild. And I felt it in your bony hand As you laid it on your child.

The Queen has land and gold, mother, The Queen has land and gold; While you are forced to your empty breast A skeleton babe to hold— A habe that is dying of want, mother, As I am dying now

With a ghastly look in its sunken eye, And famine upon its brow. What has pour Ireland done, mother, What has poor Ireland done, That the world looks on and sees as starve, Perishing one by one? Do the men of England care not, mother, The great men and the high, For the suffering sons of Erin's Isle,

Whether they live or die? There is many a brave heart here, mother, Dying of want and cold, While only across the channel, mother, Are men that roll in gold, There are rich and proud men there, mother, With wondrous wealth to view, And the bread they fling to their dogs to night

Would give me life and you! Come near to my side, mother, Come near to my side, Bnd hold me fondly as you held My farther when he died. Quick, for I cannot see you, mother, My breath is almost gone. Auther! dear mother! cre I die,

Give me three grains of com! ODD FELLOWS. Odd Fellows, when together met, Are not, perhaps, so one a set

So long as Louis Phillippe lives, it is likely that there will be in war between England and France; but he is an old man, being considerably advanced in his seventy fourth year. It is not probable that he will five many years. And what will come then? The Count of Paris, his grandson, is in his ninth year. It is searcely within the circle of probabilities that there will not be an interregnum, or in other words, a Regency. On all heads the unfitness of the Duke of Nemours is confessed and deploted. He will never be otherwise than unpopular with the nation I am happy, however, to say, that as the cricis approaches he seems to For the Cook who has lived longest in one place, become more and more penetrated with a sense of its grave importance. In a recent conversation I am assured that he made the following sagacious remarks. Speaking of the probability of war at no distant day, he said; "Whilst my father lives For the Housemaid who has remained longest in there will be no war, for he will do almost anything to prevent it; but when he is gone, I fear that war will be inevitable. And what will be our position? We shall need 100,000 men in Africa (Algiers:) 100,000 more for the fertifications around Paris; another 100,000 to man the fortresses of the kingdom; and we shall have only 100,000 left to resist perhaps all Europe " Upon the Min. ister's observing that, in case of necessity, France could have far more than 400,000 men under arms, the Duke replied: "I know it; I know that there is one way by which France may be converted into a nation of soldiers, and that is to go to work and sing everywhere the Moracilles Hymn?
